Penguins Sighted in B.C.

B.C. ornithologists and naturalists are all in a tizzy because the most dapper character in the bird world has made an appearance in B.C. waters — thousands of miles away from its natural habitat in the southern hemisphere.

Provincial ornithologist Wayne Campbell said today that over the last two weeks in July there were reports from several sources of penguins being seen around the coasts of northern Vancouver Island.

He said the reports of sightings came from naturalists at Mitlenatch Island nature sanctuary east of Campbell River, lighthouse keepers at Egg Island on the northeastern tip of Vancouver Island and a fisherman off Quatsino.

Campbell, associate curator of the vertebrate zoology division at the Provincial Museum, said there is little doubt that the two-foot-tall birds sighted were penguins.

Campbell said the problem now is to explain how the penguins got here. One explanation is that they escaped from a zoo, but checks with zoos along the west coast have turned up no reports of swimaway penguins.

He said no penguins are known to breed north of the equator, but he believes the ones spotted here could be the Humboldt species.

"The Humboldt breeds in terrific numbers off the coasts of Chile and Peru," Campbell added.

One theory attributes the local sightings to something which the ornithologists call post-breeding dispersal.

"What happens with a lot of birds is that as soon as the young have left, the birds wander all over the place," Campbell explained.

"It's possible that they got in a current and followed the feed north, using the coast as a corridor."

SECOND TRUCK in a week crashed on Vancouver's Port Mann Bridge Wednesday, spewing cheese down the embankment. One man, sleeping in the bunk-cab compartment, was found crushed to death after rescue workers spent 40 minutes disentangling the wreckage. The driver is in satisfactory condition in hospital. The truck hit a maintenance vehicle parked by the approach to the bridge.

$2.5B CUTS SET

Ottawa Juggling To Find Savings

OTTAWA (CP) — Robert Andras, minister in charge of the federal treasury, is juggling with billions of dollars in the government's pre-election project to cut costs, reallocate funds to promised new programs and make way for promised tax cuts.

In an announcement Wednesday night covering plans to March 31, 1980, he referred to total savings of $2.5 billion — $965 million arranged earlier this year, additional cuts of $1.5 billion just agreed by cabinet and further cost reductions of "at least another $1 billion" to be worked out in the weeks ahead.

But he calculated that when the project is complete and all the bills are in, total spending next year will grow at about the same rate as this year — roughly nine per cent.

Public servants face a job shuffle and loss of pay bonuses for bilingual work and some language training.

Andras said "there will be an absolute reduction" of 5,000 jobs in the 300,000-member public service, most of it after April 1, 1979.

However, the current attrition rate within the public service is said to be about 10 per cent annually, up to 30,000 jobs normally vacated and refilled.

While some jobs would disappear as a result of a proposed $2.5 billion reduction in government activity over two years, Andras said persons left unemployed would be given preference in other public service job openings.

"We're going to do everything possible to minimize the impact on those affected," Andras told a news conference.

The government plans to scrap on April 1, 1979, the bilingual pay bonus program that began last September and has been a thorn in the side of treasury board ever since. This will result in a saving of $35 million, Andras said.

Under the program, annual bonuses of $800 retroactive to Nov. 1, 1976, are paid to employees officially required to use both official languages — French and English — on the job.

'ANOTHER SHELL GAME?'

Times News Services

Cuts in federal spending announced Wednesday by Treasury Board Chairman Robert Andras were greeted with skepticism by opposition party leaders today.

New Democrat leader Ed Broadbent said federal plans to cut $2.5 billion from current and planned government spending make no economic or social sense.

The across the board cuts reflect no system of priorities, Broadbent said, and will result in reducing some worthwhile government projects.

"This is simply Liberal crisis management totally geared for political reasons, having no regard at all for the serious economic and social development of this country," Broadbent told reporters.

Conservative leader Joe Clark said federal spending cuts appear to him to be a "shell game" involving cuts in expenditures the federal government may not have planned anyway.

"The general idea I've seen suggests to me it's another shell game. They're making cuts in expenditures they may not have contemplated."

$30,000 Blaze: $1 Fine

MACKENZIE (CP) — Brian Seymour, 19, of Fort Ware, was fined one dollar Wednesday and sentenced to one day in jail after pleading guilty to a charge of arson laid after a $30,000 forest fire was started in early July.

Seymour was charged after the fire burned about 14 acres near Fort Ware, about 300 kilometres north of this Interior community.

He pleaded guilty July 19.

Acting Forests Minister Pat McGeer said the decision is a matter for the courts and not for a cabinet minister to comment on.

He said if the province feels the decision was not correct, then it is up to the attorney-general's ministry to appeal the penalty.

8 Held Hostage

CHICAGO (AP) — Two Croatian terrorists armed with guns and explosives seized eight hostages at the West German Consulate today, police said. One hostage was later released.

Officials said the terrorists — believed to be a man and a woman — want freedom for Stjepan Bilandzic, a Croatian nationalist leader imprisoned in West Germany and facing extradition to Yugoslavia.

One hostage, reached by telephone, was asked if the seven were in danger.

"Yes, we are, very much," was the response.

Three Balloonists Land In France

Victory wave as balloon descends

Times News Services

PARIS — Three U.S. balloonists set down in a wheatfield near the town of Evreux, 40 miles southwest of Paris, this evening to end their historic journey as the first men to cross the Atlantic by balloon.

Thousands of excited Frenchmen raced to the landfall as the Albuquerque, N.M. businessmen — Ben Abruzzo, 48, Maxie Anderson, 44, and Larry Newman, 31 — guided their silver and black helium-filled balloon, the Double Eagle II, out of blue skies after a six-day flight from Presque Isle, Maine.

The landing came after the trio interrupted their descent in an apparent effort to manoeuvre their craft closer to the French capital.

Witnesses along French country roads said the three stopped their descent at about 1,500 feet and appeared to be trying to drift closer to Paris than Evreux.

As their huge silver-and-black craft drifted southeastward over Evreux, 50 miles west of Paris, the businessman-adventurers broke out the French tricolor to match the Stars and Stripes floating from their gondola.

An hour earlier, they had radioed ground controllers they were starting to come down. In a previous message they had ordered hamburgers and French fries on arrival.

The flight electrified all of France. Crowds of thousands watched the high-flying balloon, a bright pinpoint in the sunny blue late-afternoon sky, as it crossed high over the Channel coast and across the hedgerows of Normandy toward Paris.

Viewed from a helicopter, the 11-storey high balloon coasted gracefully through a cloudless sky over a checkerboard of farmlands, nudged along by a 24-kilometre-an-hour wind. The men were clearly visible in the red-and-yellow gondola, bundled in coats against the biting cold but apparently relaxed.

The balloonists' wives had flown from London to the Channel port of Deauville, where they were conversing by radio with their husbands.

It was the 18th attempt to cross the Atlantic by balloon, and the 16th from west to east. The last previous attempt, and the closest to being successful, was made two weeks ago by Britons Donald Cameron and Christopher Davey, who ditched 117 nautical miles from the French coast.

"This is certainly a great day in ballooning history and we congratulate them," Davey said today.

Seven persons died in previous attempts.

LRB Ends Hospital Dispute

VANCOUVER (CP) — A labor dispute that threatened to shut down 110 public hospitals across British Columbia was cooled off Wednesday when the provincial Labor Relations Board (LRB) ordered the hospital bargaining association to immediately implement a controversial contract award.

A LRB panel, headed by chairman Don Munroe, also ordered Hospital Employees Union (HEU) members, who walked off the job at four hospitals to protest the hospital labor relations association's (HLRA) decision to appeal the award, to refrain from further work stoppages.

The order came after 700 employees at Vancouver General Hospital and another 75 at the George Derby Branch of Shaughnessy Hospital in nearby Burnaby walked off the job Wednesday. On Monday, workers at Mount St. Joseph hospital here were off the job for 1½ hours and workers at Burnaby General Hospital held a study session Friday.

HEU president Bill Black said he believed his 20,000-member union will have no problem living with the LRB order. HLRA official Jack Fradley refused comment on it.

Police Raid Customs Men

VANCOUVER — A combined force of National Harbors Board police and Canada Customs investigators armed with search warrants raided homes of five customs officers Wednesday and seized a quantity of meat.

Police are investigating allegations of widespread corruption on the Vancouver waterfront involving customs officers receiving large quantities of imported meat for about one-half a cent a pound.

The allegations involve a senior customs official, several lower-ranking customs officers and employees of stevedoring, shipping and customs broking firms.

Sgt. Hunter Scot of the national Harbors Board police said Wednesday the investigation involved more than a ton of meat imported through the port of Vancouver.

"We searched five homes in Vancouver, North Vancouver and Burnaby," Scott said. He would not say how much meat was seized.

Police said they believe customs officers used coercion and forged documents to acquire meat for the cost of the duty alone — one-half a cent a pound.

When foreign exporters send meat and other commodities to Canada they often put in more cases than are specified on the manifest. This may be unintentional — due to bad checking — or it may be deliberate to allow for waterfront theft.

WALL ST. SOARS

NEW YORK (AP) — Enthusiasm over the Carter administration's pledge to try to stabilize the falling U.S. dollar sent the stock market soaring over the 900 mark Thursday in active trading.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 9.01 in the first one and one-half hours to 903.59.

The dollar closed at 185.4550 yen, up from 183.76 at Wednesday's close and the previous postwar low of 181.80 set on Tuesday. It started the day at 185.000

...91 Years Young

But the decade just completed by B.C.'s Provincial Museum in its "new" premises on Belleville Street was no ordinary one.

Those 10 years were a time of rebirth for an archaic, undernourished institution, a period which saw it spring forward as an energetic youngster in magical new clothes to become one of the foremost museums in North America.

It seems an appropriate time to compare the old and the new, to discuss what has been accomplished and what still lies ahead.

Subsequent articles Friday and Saturday will look at the work which goes on behind the scenes in two of the museum's divisions — modern history and conservation — as well as some of the special problems they face.

Davis Never Sought Economy: Secretary

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two former secretaries of ex-transport minister Jack Davis testified at the first day of his theft and fraud trial Wednesday that he never had expressed to them a preference for flying economy class on government business.

They also said he never had told them that he sometimes followed a practice of "downgrading" first-class airline tickets to economy before boarding flights and personally obtaining refunds for the difference — while charging first class in expense claims he submitted to the government.

His use of the practice on eight trips is the basis of the charge on which he is being tried before County Court Judge J. J. Anderson. The trial is expected to last at least through Friday.

The testimony was given by Margaret Sheppard and her assistant, Jennifer Roach, both of whom have worked in the provincial transport minister's office for more than seven years. They ordered the tickets and reservations for seven of the eight Davis trips in question. He made arrangements himself for the eighth trip.

Sheppard, who prepared Davis' expense accounts, also testified that four days after Davis was forced to resign from the cabinet on April 3 this year over the downgrading, and after an investigation was under way into his airline refunds, Davis asked how she would answer questions about whether Davis had ever requested economy when getting her to make travel arrangements.

"Well, I said, you never did request economy," she told the court.

The 62-year-old Davis, standing in the prisoner's box, pleaded not guilty to each count Wednesday as an indictment charging theft and fraud amounting to "approximately $1,074" was read to him at the beginning of the trial by the court registrar.

Davis had elected for trial by judge without jury at a preliminary hearing last month in West Vancouver.

The indictment says that Davis, between Feb. 28, 1976, and April 5, 1978, committed the $1,074 fraud and theft by misrepresenting the actual cost of his travel (mostly on trips east, to Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal) and by obtaining refunds pertaining to these airline tickets.

Crown prosecutor John Hall, in evidence of refunds and related documents, included applications made personally by Davis, who on one occasion received cash and on the others had refund cheques sent to his home.

Defence lawyer Allan McEachern is not contesting the facts of the refunds, but is contending that they do not constitute any fraud or theft because cabinet ministers can travel first class as a matter of right, or can claim as an allowance the difference between first class and a lower cost of travel.

Hall said in an opening summary of what he intends to prove that, on two legs of two separate trips taken by Davis, the accused former minister received refund

Radioactive Gravel Fear 'Alarmist'

MONTREAL (CP) — A spokesman for Environment Minister Marcel Leger confirmed today that radioactive waste from an abandoned mine at Oka, Que., near Montreal, has been used for landfill. But he said reports of an emergency are "premature and alarmist."

Pierre Paquette said in an interview in Quebec City that the Environment Protection Service has been trying for more than two months to close the operation by a company called Les Agregats d'Oka, which sells waste from the mine for use in road construction, dam building and other projects.

A columbium mine at the site was closed by the Environmental Protection Service in Novemer, 1976, because of dangers of radioactive contamination, Paquette said.

The mine went bankrupt and remained closed until May this year, when the quarrying firm leased the land around the mine.

About 20 days after quarrying operations began, an inspector was sent to the site and on June 2, a notice to close the operation was sent by the government, Paquette said.

After repeated attempts to enforce the order were ignored, Paquette said the government obtained a temporary injunction in Superior Court earlier this week to shut the operation. A request for a permanent injunction will be heard later this month.

Asked to comment on reports that 800,000 tons of sand and other radioactive landfill had been sold, Paquette said there is no way of knowing how much had been used.

But he said the situation is under control and there is no immediate danger.

"The compnay will be responsible because we advised them of the danger," he said.

He added it was possible the fill had been used on the province's highways because the transport department relies on private contractors, who can buy their filll where they want.

Andras Juggles to Find Savings to reduce spending on second-language training programs by $12.5 million between now and the end of the 1978-1979 fiscal year.

The cost of attempting to create a bilingual public service through the programs since 1964 has totalled nearly $400 million.

Andras gave a number of other examples of the spending reductions, including $150 million from "committed expenditures" of the defence department. But he left it up to the department to say where the money will be cut. Freezing foreign aid programs under the Canadian International Development Agency at 1978 levels reduces expenditures by $133 million, while freezing the CBC's budget saves $71 million, he said.

The external affairs department will close some posts and reduce public affairs programs for a saving of $6.5 million. And ending the $800-a-year bilingual bonus for civil servants cuts $35 million a year.

Every department has been told to cut its operating costs for an estimated total saving of $250 million, Andras said.

There will be a $388 million spending reduction for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corp., the largest single item, but Andras refused to say how this will be achieved.

A decision has been made to "commence orderly mothballing" of a plant under construction at La Prade, near Trois Rivieres, Que., to make heavy water for the nuclear power program. Savings of up to $150 million on the $1-billion project will be achieved, the government estimates.

The transport ministry, and its related agencies like the Canadian National Railways and the National Harbors Board, will have $135 million cut from a $1.7 billion budget.

The total outlay in the current fiscal year ending next March 31 will edge down to $48.3 billion from the $48.4 billion projected four months ago. But the deficit to be covered by borrowing will move up to between $11.6 billion and $11.8 billion from the previous forecast of $11.5 billion.

In the 1979-80 financial year, he estimates, federal spending will go up by $4.4 billion to $52.7 billion. But without the cost cuts already arranged or pending, he said, spending next year threatened to grow by roughly $6.6 billion to about $55 billion because of fixed commitments.

To begin at the beginning last February, Andras presented Parliament with spending estimates for this fiscal year amounting to almost $48.8 billion.

Then, in the April 10 tax budget, the government announced that total spending would be reduced this year by $350 million to about $48.4 billion.

Treasury officials said Wednesday that $265 million out of the promised April cuts of $350 million now has been worked out in detail. Furthermore, they said, there had already been an unpublicized decision to extend those cuts into next year and increase them to $700 million.

So the $265 million in cuts already pinpointed for this year, plus the decision to chop $700 million from next year's plans, adds up to the $965 million that Andras referred to as "reductions that the government has already achieved through a determined cutting exercise that began in April.".

It now appears that the $500 million proposed in May was to include the $350 million projected in the April budget. Andras said Wednesday night that the April target would not only be met but exceeded by at least $100 million, meaning that "in this current year we are cutting the budget by close to $500 million."

Andras also said that the total of $1.5 billion in cuts agreed by cabinet Wednesday and the new pledge of at least $1 billion in further cuts to be announced in coming weeks are in addition to the $965 million he said had already been arranged — a total of almost $3.5 billion over the two years, the bulk of it next year.

But promised new programs to generate jobs and assist the needy this year and next will eat into the grand total of savings, reducing them by as much as $1 billion. And unspecified tax reductions promised by Trudeau Aug. 1 will increase budget deficits.

While he gave no details of new spending plans or tax cuts, the Andras figures indicate that these could add up to between $600 million and $800 million through the rest of this fiscal year to next March 31.

This is indicated by his calculation that the current-year budget is being reduced by almost $500 million but that the budget deficit will increase by between $100 million and $300 million.

Fish Fight Disaster Warning

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. fishing industry could face long-term disaster if troller fishermen succeed in getting a court injunction against the current fishing ban, a federal fisheries spokesman said Wednesday.

Dr. Wally Johnson, director-general for the Pacific region, said the injunction could set a precedent that could be followed by gillnet fishermen or any other user group involved in the fisheries and thus ruin over-all attempts at conserving fish stocks.

Dr. Johnson and Ron MacLeod, fisheries chief operations manager, were speaking at a news conference called because of threats by trollers to defy the ban imposed last Saturday against their taking any further sockeye salmon from the Adams River run.

On Tuesday, a group of troller fishermen announced their intention to seek a court injunction to prevent the ministry from continuing the ban.

MacLeod said there is a trend to threats of civil disobedience and court action by user groups who feel injured by conservation measures.

Although gillnet fishermen typically face bans limiting their fishing time, this is the first year that trollers have been restricted.

MacLeod said the ban was introduced because the Adams River run is drastically lower than anticipated and that the catch of 1.9 million fish so far could mean a 200,000 shortfall in the planned escapement of 1.4 million to conserve stock for future runs.

MacLeod said the situation will be reassessed Friday.

$927,000 Spree?

LOS ANGELES (AP) — What would you do if your monthly bank statement showed an error of $927,000—and it was in your favor?

Police believe Arne Ramon Ristol spent it.

The banking error was made in late May when a clerk at United California Bank wrote the wrong account number for a $927,000 deposit by a real estate company, police spokesman Willy Wilson said.

"He began withdrawing the money about the middle of June and it was all gone by the end of July," Wilson said of Ristol. "The bank had no way of knowing what was going on because it balanced out on the computer."

Arms raised in victory, U.S. marathon swimmer John Kinsella leaves the water of Lake Ontario at the Canadian National Exhibition grounds in Toronto Wednesday after swimming 51-kilometres across the lake. The Oakbrook, Ill., man lopped more than an hour off the previous record for the swim, completing it in 13 hours and 49 minutes and coming in 4.5 kilometres ahead of his nearest competitor. He won $25,000 for the feat.

Violence Rises In Beer Drought

VANCOUVER (CP) — Violence in the city's skid road area is up — a disturbing situation that Karen O'Sannacery feels can be tied into the strike-lockout in the B.C. brewery industry.

A generally placid population of chronic street alcoholics has switched from beer to wine, or if they're not selective, shaving lotion, shoe polish and rubbing alcohol.

On the positive side, however, the two-month strike-lockout has resulted in less traffic deaths and driving-while-impaired charges.

S. Sgt. Ken McLarty said last week that city traffic fatalities to that point numbered 19 compared with 27 in the same period in 1977. He said it was due in part to the reduced number of people drinking in beer parlors.

Those people are, however, still finding booze, said a spokesman for Alcoholics Anonymous.

"I can assure you that brewery strike is not going to affect anybody's drinking if he is an alcoholic," he said. "It may inconvenience him, but, rest assured, he will find a substitute."

British Columbians annually consume about 35 million dozen bottles of beer, and despite the fact beer is not readily available, it is not difficult to find.

Several American brands are being imported and the United States border is just a short drive away. Other imports are being sold (at $1.85-a-bottle or more) in cocktail lounges.

A Granville Street cocktail waitress said customers are getting used to the American beer, but "they still prefer the Canadian stuff."

Sam Chessa, manager of Black Top Cabs, said his company's business has been "slowed down quite a bit" by a loss of business usually generated by the beer parlor trade.

The draft mystique, however — the security blanket of one beer in hand, another filled glass at the ready in case the waiter has a stroke, or the hotel catches fire — has hurt the taxi business most severely.

"People like their draft beer," he said. "Bottled beer is considered more of a cocktail lounge type of thing."

Red Asylums Used as Jails

MOSCOW (AP) — A Moscow psychiatrist said Wednesday that persons without mental problems are hospitalized in Soviet asylums as a form of punishment. He was the first medical man to confirm to Western reporters the accusations brought by dissidents.

At a news conference held by a dissident group, Dr. Alexander Voloshanovich said he decided to speak out because of the conviction Tuesday of Alexander Podrabinek, 24, a dissident who gathered evidence about the situation in psychiatric hospitals.

Voloshanovich, 37, is on the staff of Moscow's Dolgoprudny psychiatric hospital. He said he checked 27 persons who told Podrabinek's group they were wrongly committed for treatment, and "Among those is examined I found not a single case of definite mental illness."

Voloshanovich said he had worked as an anonymous consultant for Podrabinek and his group, which compiled the case histories of more than 200 persons allegedly sent to insane asylums after coming into conflict with the authorities.

He said many other psychiatrists feel as he does "on an emotional level" but are afraid to speak out.

Voloshanovich said only a few of the 27 patients he examined could be considered real dissidents, with the others committed after having trouble with superiors at work or applying to emigrate.

He said he had doubts about the condition of one former patient but he believed he should not have been committed without hospital tests to determine a diagnosis.

"I do not consider my reports on them to be the last word of truth, but rather a basis for further examination," Voloshanovich said.

I Don't Believe Him, Says Munro of Lalonde

Times News Services

Esquimalt-Saanich MP Donald Munro said Wednesday he disbelieves a statement by federal-provincial relations minister Marc Lalonde that Queen Elizabeth indicated her satisfaction with constitutional changes in her role in Canada.

"I just don't believe it ," he said. "I would like them to produce the letter from the Queen. I don't think they can. It's bad business when you can't believe ministers of your own government."

Lalonde told a parliamentary committee Wednesday that the queen's secretary had sent a letter dated June 20 indicating that Her Majesty was content with the proposed change in the royal style and titles and was satisfied the proposals would not alter the essential relationship of the crown to Canada.

Munro said all the queen had done was to accept the advice of her Canadian ministers.

"If they wrote her a letter and asked her to sign it, she would have to sign it," he added.

He doubted that the queen had agreed to the changes in her role in her own initiative.

Other MPs and Senators also expressed surprise at the statement.

A number of committee members accused Lalonde of trying to divert the attention of Canadians away from the serious issues of national unity and the economy with constitutional window-dressing.

Senator Eugene Forsey (L-Ontario) protested, saying the monarchy is not a minor issue, but one with stormy emotional connotations, for Canadians in many parts of the country.

He said the government's proposals clearly downgrade the position Queen in Canada.

"It's in the bill, clean and flat. The Queen is taken right, straight out of Parliament," said Forsey, shaking his finger.

A Step So Small

The federal Liberal government began to unveil Wednesday night its program to cut government spending with a list of departments and agencies that will be required to hold the line or reduce their budgets.

At first glance the proposals appear to be quite reasonable; many Canadians will undoubtedly agree that Prime Minister Trudeau and his cabinet have found some of the most obvious areas of "fat" in the federal budget and are working to pare them down.

No one, for example, is likely to object much to the freezing of the CBC budget at its current level, to the policy of holding the line on foreign aid, to the mothballing of a heavy water plant now under construction or to the cutbacks in the public works department.

A few of the cuts may be more controversial: the idea of cutting back on bilingualism programs for civil servants will surely be welcomed in western Canada but is likely to meet opposition in Quebec and perhaps in the Ottawa region; the defence department, already struggling to keep up to modern standards, is likely to be most upset about the $150 million cutback in its budget.

Moreover, other more objectionable cuts may be announced later. The health and welfare ministry, for example, has announced no specifics of its cuts although Treasury Board president Robert Andras has warned that that ministry too will be facing budget reductions. Indeed the only programs exempt from cuts will be services to old-age pensioners and war veterans.

What is most discouraging, however, is to realize how little the effect of all the cuts will be on the over-all budget. The government's goal is to save $2.5 billion in 1½ years.

That amount is so large the average Canadian cannot even contemplate it realistically; yet, even were it all to be saved in a single year, it would do nothing more than knock about 20 to 25 per cent off the government's deficit (that's right — not its budget, but its deficit).

Since the government plans to use the money it saves to sponsor new programs to stimulate the economy, even the deficit will not be reduced in absolute terms.

That somehow makes one wonder if the whole program will actually do the country any economic good, or if its hidden goal is really to do the Liberals some good by displaying to the public that they honestly are trying to implement spending restraints.

The government may be facing in the right direction, but the cuts are a step so small it's impossible to see that it's made any definite progress.

Two Good Appointments

Victoria probably greets the announcement that George Pedersen, vice-president at UVic, is the new president of Simon Fraser University with mixed emotions — glad for his promotion, regret that he will be leaving the University of Victoria.

It is difficult to pick out individuals to praise for the accomplishments of such a large, amorphous institution as a university, but Pedersen deserves a good deal of the credit for the changes that have transformed the Gordon Head campus in a few short years.

Personable and approachable, Pedersen helped in the planning that brought UVic the province's second law school, a new music faculty building and the University Centre — a program of expansion and construction that probably outstripped even the University of B.C.'s boom years of the mid-1960s.

He has strong opinions, especially on the provincial ministry of education. The ministry appears to flit from policy to policy like a butterfly, ignoring the concerns of those who have to live with the aftermath (our words, not Pedersen's, but he is of a similar mind).

Earlier this year, he said the ministry's approach to university planning "appears to be nothing less than haphazard, highly variable from week to week, lacking in over-all integration and normally announced without benefit of meaningful dialogue with the various constituencies directly affected." The Universities Council of B.C., which co-ordinates financial planning for the three major universities, is in a chaotic state and losing its effectiveness.

Simon Fraser University appears to be an entirely different sort of challenge. SFU seemed to promise so much in the beginning but it degenerated into a snarling pit of radical student politics and an unending dispute over the dismissal of a dozen faculty members, dissipating any forward movement. The university used up three presidents in little more than a decade; its stature in the academic community is still uncertain.

If George Pedersen is as effective as the fourth as he was at UVic, he'll need none of the luck Victoria wishes him in the new job.

Another academic appointment to take note of is the choice of Lloyd Morin as new principal of Camosun College to replace Grant Fisher next year.

Like Pedersen, a teacher who went into the administration of higher education, Morin is well-suited to lead Camosun into a new phase. He carried out a highly-regarded internal evaluation of the college's strengths and weaknesses and now will be in a position to implement his ideas.

In some respects, a two-year college like Camosun is probably more difficult to manage than even a big university. Compared to UVic, Camosun College presents administrators with a serious challenge. It has more students enrolled in more courses at half a dozen locations around town.

Camosun may lack the central focus of one campus but its spirit can't be kept down. Every success to the new principal.

Kennedy Weighs the Odds

WASHINGTON — Suddenly presidential politics is bustin' out all over:

Rep. Phillip Crane of Illinois has announced for the Republican nomination and made a ritual first trip to New Hampshire.

Ronald Reagan, undermined by this conservative challenge, has declared in an interview with U.S. News and World Report: "You know and I know that this is not time for someone to make a declaration," adding the ritual reservation, "My options are open."

And Sen. Edward Kennedy, appearing on ABC's Issues and Answers, said of President Carter that although he would have Democratic opposition in 1980, "I think he will get renominated and get re-elected." Then he offered the ritual disclaimer: "I have every intention of supporting him."

Kid's Showboating

Translation, for those who since 1976 may have grown fuzzy on the vocabulary and moves of the presidential game:

Crane: "Reagan's 67 now, 70 in 1981. If I show some early foot and lock up some conservative support, the old geezer might have to back out or at least take me for vice-president. Since the feds will subsidize me in the primaries, and at worst it's a head start for 1984, what's to lose?"

Reagan: "The kid's showboating. The old pro will move in when the time's ripe and you better believe it if you want to be with a winner."

Kennedy: "Id be an idiot to say anything that would hurt Carter or divide the party. If he can make it again, fine, I can wait. If he can't, I'll have to make a decision."

Crane, it says on this form sheet, is to be taken seriously. He is young and attractive to Republican conservatives, a new face in a party that needs one, and Jimmy Carter conclusively demonstrated the advantages of an early start in a multi-candidate, multi-primary, federally subsidized race. Reagan would be the oldest president ever inaugurated, and the Crane candidacy is something he and his advisers definitely did not need or want — indeed, had planned an early 1979 announcement of their own partially in hopes of forestalling.

Kennedy's situation and purposes are more obscure. While he is not publicly foreclosing a candidacy in 1980, and the reliable Saul Freidman of the Knight-Ridder newspapers recently wrote that "belief is growing among Democratic political leaders" that Kennedy will be at least "available" in 1980, my own view — reasonably well-informed by the senator himself, among others — is that he has made no judgment of any kind about his course of action in 1980.

For one thing, he is looking forward with anticipation that borders on excitement to his becoming chairman, next year, of the important Senate judiciary committee, following the retirement of James Eastland of Mississippi. For another, he genuinely believes what he told the television audience last Sunday — that Carter's relatively limited achievements and his low standing in the polls might be more the fault of congress than the president.

"It's the power of special interests that have subverted the president's program," he said.

This does not appear to be standard, semi-populist Democratic party rhetoric. Kennedy speaks frequently these days about the recently enhanced clout of the lobbyists now swarming over Capitol Hill, reflecting not only sympathy for Carter but possibly also concern about wading himself into what he sees as an almost hopeless situation for an activist president.

EDWARD KENNEDY
. . . 1980 campaign starting now

Kennedy knows, moreover, that his active or even apparently presidential candidacy would bring his "negatives" into play — Chappaquiddick, his family problems, allegations against his personal behavior. What these might do to his current high poll standing in the long and bitter campaign that assuredly would result, he is too realistic not to weigh carefully. What they might do to his family is another profound consideration, and as the last of the Kennedy brothers, the danger of attempts on his life is serious.

On the other hand, with federal subsidies and 31 primaries available, Democratic opposition against a president perceived as weak politically and personally is certain. If such opposition — say from Gov. Jerry Brown of California, despite his denials, from Sen. Pat Moynihan of New York — become a serious threat to Carter, Kennedy would surely have to consider his own political future.

May Be Forced In

As chairman of an important Senate committee, he easily can wait out four more years of an incumbent president; but could he risk eight years of a new Democratic star without seeing his own wane and disappear?

The strategy of "being available" so the party could draft him if it wished is not realistic, as Hubert H. Humphrey learned in 1976. Reforms have concentrated delegate selection in the primaries and Democratic party "leaders" no longer have much power to deliver blocs of delegates to non-primary contenders.

But if Carter were eliminated or badly damaged, Kennedy probably is well-enough known to enter only the later primaries and still defeat any other Democrat.

For Edward Kennedy, then, the real question may be whether in his own mind he has put aside any ambition to be president. If, as I believe, he has not, the circumstances of 1980 might well push him into the primary campaign even though, as I also believe, he now has no intention of running.

"... ever considered you may be sitting on a dud? ..."

Go Home, Tony

I have always watched Channel 10 with some interest and enjoyed the programs which present the varying facets of Victoria and events of value to the Victorians. These programs are well balanced, capably handled and presented to enhance the quality of our social combine and reflect the synthesis of ethnic variants which make us worthy residents of this city.

I regret that on Aug. 4 I viewed Insight with aggravation. This program purporting to present Victoria with issues of import to its residents was a slight to the intelligent fibre of our community. The views of its producer Tony McGregor, abbetted by his brother John McGregor, were extremist and vindictive and unwholesome with a racial bias.

Mrs. Kathleen Ruff of the human rights branch was in adroit defence of our constitution and the human rights. She was supported with sound and lucid comment by Tim Perrin of CFAX and both rejected and thwarted the racially fecund assertions of Tony McGregor which were directed against the East Indian and claiming the Indian culture as stigmatic to our society. Perhaps Tony McGregor does not understand that the constitution of this country respects the conglomerate of ethnic diversity and that this diversity is the pride of our national entity.

The two McGregors made strong support for the rabid utterings of Doug Collins of The Vancouver Sun whose expression has always been unobjective, in racial antipathy to the East Indian, and incendiary in its content.

A program of such malignity must be rebutted and the CRTC should prevent screening of such personally orientated issues. We Canadians have generated cultural and human values and we express them with human dignity and with a morality ingrained in our national entity. We Canadians will not bear the likes of the McGregors.

Tony McGregor visited India in green horns and I regret he is still very green. He should have profited from his visit and learnt that the Indian has inherent traits of humility, self respect and human tolerance. His views reflect attitudes more prevalent in the country of his origin which is stricken with a morbid and stringent social class system and living in the dusk of a sun which set on its imperial domains a long long time ago. Go home Tony, your kind of thinking stifles our culture. — N. S. Sehmi, President, Victoria Cultural Associaion of India and Canada.

Shocking Show

It was with complete disbelief and shock that I viewed the Cable 10 program Insight on Aug. 4 at 8 p.m. I am a Canadian citizen born in India. Political commentator Tony McGregor feels so threatened and intimidated by Kathleen Ruff, the director of the B.C. human rights branch, that he had to get two more people to prop up his own views. This program will cause tension and hatred towards the East Indian ethnic minority group.

As to Tony McGregor's argument that he has been to India and knows what India, Indians and how Harijans are treated like, let me please enlighten you. The people of India are not proud of the fact that Harijans are treated badly. The people of India are ashamed of this. Mahatma Gandhi gave his life for this, and it is he who coined the word Harijan. To atone for the bad treatment of Harijans, the government of India nowadays gives preferential treatment to them. The laws of India do not allow for discrimination against Harijans, this has happened only since independence.

It is a sad note, but is universally true that people who have racist attitudes towards other people generally try to find dissimilarities between us and them. Dissimilarities of color, attitudes, class culture and behavior.

But I am sure that if the three commentators who felt so threatened by Ms. Ruff sat down and thought, they would slowly realize that people all over the world have very similar aspirations of food, clothing and shelter. This even includes the white minority of South Africa, the Ku Klux Klan of the U.S.A. (still there) and the people who oppress the Harijans of India.

Feelings of racial hatred or racial tolerance are always present in all of us all the time; we don't need the help of the media to justify that racial intolerance is O.K. Your program will cause difficulties for the children and poorer members of our ethnic community group. — Pranab Kumar Bhattacharjee, 1015 Fairburn Drive.

A Racist Society

Mr. Sehmi's letter commented on the Aug. 4 edition of the television program I host, Insight Victoria. He states that my remarks on the program were "racially fecund" and that I claimed that Indian culture was "stigmatic to our society."

In fact, my remarks were directed against the four-thousand-year-old tradition of racial discrimination and exploitation in India which makes South Africa's dicrimination look mild by comparison.

East Indian cultural values have created in India a sub-caste of 80 million dark-skinned Harijans or untouchables many of whom are afraid even to walk in the shadow of a Brahmin, a member of the light-skinned priest caste.

In the main, they are restricted to jobs such as cleaning out toilets, sweeping streets and carrying away dead animals — jobs considered unclean by the higher castes.

It isn't only the jobs which the Harijans do which are considered unclean. The Harijans themselves are believed to be unclean, a fact which makes their supression and exploitation the most vicious and cruel in the world.

If Mr. Sehmi is saying that such information should be supressed or hidden from the Canadian public, I suggest he has not yet become aware of the high ethical standards expected of Canadian journalists.

Mr. Sehmi says that my kind of thinking stifles his culture — a culture that is the most racist in the world. If so, I hope it does. And I hope I can persuade him that the western values of tolerance and compassion for the underdog are far more admirable than the values which exist in his country of origin.

If Mr. Sehmi wishes to dispute any of the statements I have made about India or the cultural values that exist there, I would be happy to invite him to discuss the matter with me on Cable 10's Insight Victoria. — Tony MacGregor, Victoria Press Gallery.

Keep Centres Open

A few months ago, under the auspices of the minister of energy, mines and resources, a Centre for Energy Conservation was set up in this city and, presumably, in other cities across Canada, to investigate ways and means of reducing the amount of energy consumed and to educate the public in these matters. This seemed a worthwhile project. Indeed, in view of decreasing reserves of petroleum, one that in the comparatively near future will be of vital concern to all of us. The writer now learns that it is proposed to close down these centres at the end of August. This seems a great pity.

In this respect one notes that when proposals are made for increasing electric generating capacity they are usually opposed by individuals or organized groups for one reason or another — a nuclear station on the grounds of a possible radiation hazard, a hydroelectric station on the grounds of possible interference with fish runs and possible hazards to downstream communities, a coal-fired station on the grounds of atmospheric pollution and transmission lines on the grounds that they spoil the environment. Furthermore, if, due to an insufficiency of electric generating capacity, it becomes necessary to institute brownouts there will doubtless be a protest that new generating stations had not been built. In each of these cases the protests would have some validity and the only way to satisfy them all is to reduce the need for new power stations by a program of rigorous energy conservation.

In closing the writer would like to say that he is a retired engineer and has no connection whatever with the Centre for Energy Conservation or with the government. — C. H. Ker Cooper, Victoria.

Seatbelt Law

Re: your editorial Saving Lives (Victoria Times, July 28) — I hope the seat belt law is having a good effect, but I think before drawing that conclusion, it is necessary to evaluate the impact of alcohol enforcement activities, which by any standard, is a far more significant contributor to motor vehicle injuries than the use or non-use of seat belts.

The ICBC statistic as to percentage of drivers and non-drivers wearing seat belts, as you probably know, is about 73 per cent and 58 per cent respectively, and the percentages seem to be dropping. I still believe we could have had about the same impact on a voluntary basis with a strong multi-media publicity campaign. — Gordon F. Gibson, MLA, Leader of the Liberal Party in B.C.

Architects Adopt Humanistic Credo

Machu-Picchu . . . people are part of ecology too

Last weekend a small group of prominent architects from North and South America met in Washington to scuttle the Charter of Athens and hoist the Charter of Machu-Picchu.

Like the old, the new document is to chart a way out of our environmental problems to a more satisfying urban life for everyone.

At Athens, 45 years ago almost to the day, modern architects chartered a predominantly technological approach — high-rise housing projects, freeways, urban dispersal.

At Machu-Picchu, last December, a new generation of architects and planners advocated a more humanistic approach — citizen participation, historic continuity, adapting buildings and settlements to nature and the ecology.

The place of origin of the two statements is significant, say the signers of the Machu-Picchu declaration. Athens, the cradle of Western civilization, represents rationality, as embodied in Aristotle and Plato. Machu-Picchu, the ancient Inca city in Peru (which stood up better than more recent Spanish colonial cities nearby), represents the awareness that humans are part of the natural ecology.

By WOLF VON ECKARDT
The Washington Post

The Charter of Athens came out of a cruise conference of the International Congress of Modern Architecture, better known by its French acronmy CIAM, which sailed from Marseilles in August 1933. The congress was dominated by the owlish-looking, Swiss-born French architect Le Corbusier, who used to paint cubist pictures in the morning and practise architecture in the afternoon.

Among the members of CIAM were practically all the now famous architects of the time — Gropius, Mies van der Rohe, Breuer, Aalto and others, along with some historians, like Giedion, and some painters, like Leger.

The 1933 shipboard meeting, with its stopover in Athens, agreed, amidst much frolicking, that due to industrialization, the proliferation of automobiles, rapid urban growth and non-planning, "chaos has entereed the city." It laid down rules and planning principles to assure for all citizens equal rights to good housing, health, education, recreation, transportation and job opportunities.

Unlike the Machu-Picchu statement and other architectural manifestos (for which architects seem to have a peculiar predilection), these rules and principles were never specifically hammered out and signed by the conference participants. Hitler had come to power in Germany. The world was in turmoil. And when the cruise was over everyone hurried home to cast the new wisdom in concrete rather than words.

It was not until 10 years later, in the desolation of Nazi-occupied Paris, that Le Corbusier worked out the charter from his notes and other papers and published it anonymously with a cryptic introduction by Jean Giraudoux, the playwright of Tiger at the Gates and The Madwoman of Chaillot. I suppose Giraudoux wanted to confuse the Gestapo.

City exploded over countryside

In English translation, the charter reached American libraries only in 1973. By that time the planning principles it sets forth had changed urban life around the globe more profoundly than any other architectural concepts since the Renaissance.

Renaissance planning, infatuated with rediscovered Classic grandeur, introduced perspective and, along with the invention of gunpowder, eliminated medieval city walls.

CIAM planning, infatuated with the promise of machine technology, invented high-rise apartment projects — slab-open space-slab — and, along with mass-produced automobiles, exploded the city all over the countryside.

Machine production, however, failed to produce human happiness and social justice. Along with its blessings, it brought pollution, ugliness and a potentially catastrophic misuse of land and natural resources.

Architects and planners are increasingly aware of the shortcomings of the modern credo. Some 10 years ago, the late Greek city planner, Constantinos A. Doxiadis, warned that CIAM planning theories are leading us to commit "great urban crimes." With the help of some of the world's leading intellectuals, such as Barbara Ward, Margaret Mead, Buckminster Fuller, Arnold Toynbee and Marshal McLuhan, Doxiadis — on lovely conference cruises to the Greek islands — tried to develop a new approach to planning human settlements. He called it "ekistics."

Integration needed for vitality

The Charter of Machu-Picchu is another effort in the same direction. It is based on a week-long conference held at the National Univerit of Peru in Lima and attended by leading architects and planners from several countries in this hemisphere. They included Felix Candeia of Mexico (now teaching at Chicago) and Dorn McGrath Jr., who heads the planning department of George Washington University in Washington, D.C.

The Machu-Picchu document reaffirms much that was said by CIAM and praises "the vitality and continuity of the modern movement in architecture and planning." It blames politics rather than planning theory for the "great urban crimes."

"Economic decisions at national and regional levels seldom include direct consideration of city priorities and solutions to urban problems," the charter complains. Besides, the world population has doubled since the Charter of Athens was written, and city populations have grown even faster, causing cities to deteriorate.

Nevertheless, the Machu-Picchu charter finds CIAM wrong in segregating, or zoning cities into different functional components — residential, commercial, industrial, cultural and recreational. Urban vitality, it says, demands integration of people and activities.

The charter calls for less emphasis on individual buildings and motor traffic and more emphasis on community architecture, historic preservation, and "the continuity of urban texture."

The meeting in Washington last weekend of some of the signers of the Machu-Picchu charter considered ways to continue the discussion in architecture schools here and abroad.

Meanwhile German architects are similarly trying to sort out their thinking. The International Union of Architects, which has given the Machu-Picchu group an honor award, is taking note of these various efforts to update a modernism that is no longer modern.

At its next convention in Mexico next October, the international organization may well make the burial of the Charter of Athens an official international event.

Iran's Fanatic Ruler Pursues His 'Vision'

By GAVIN YOUNG
London Observer

Contemplating the past month of urban violence in Iran, the Shah must have had a feeling of deja vu. In 1953, when he was 32, with mobs rampaging in the streets of Tehran and other cities, he fled the country.

It was a short exile. Despite Soraya's fervent hope that she and her husband could pack it all in and go and farm quietly in America, the Shah returned after only a week, swept back to the Peacock Throne by part of the Army — helped by CIA-organized street-gangs. The main catalyst of the anti-Shah movement, the reforming, nationalistic prime minister, Mulhammad Mussadiq, was arrested.

Now mobs are once more out in the street — rioting, sporadic for months, broke out again last week. Hundreds of people have been killed this year, hundreds more wounded.

Past echoes

There are other echoes of the past. Mussadiq had the support of Muslim divines, the mullahs, who objected to Western exploitation of Iran's oil. (Joining in was the Tudeh, or Communist Party, out to destroy the monarchy for its own sake.)

Today xenophobia has been revived by a massive influx of technicians and military advisers, mostly American, and their families. The mullahs regard them as intolerable intruders from the permissive outside world. At the same time left-wingers — students and intellectuals — are rampaging against police repression.

For the present, however, he is not poised for flight. For one thing he is not the timid young soul he was in 1953. For another, there is no charismatic Mussadiq figure to rally the deeply divided, anti-Shah factions. Probably only opposition from the armed forces could destroy him.

The Army is the corner stone of the regime. It is immensely well-armed (its British-built tanks are more advanced than those supplied to the British Army). Its generals run SAVAK (State Security and Intelligence Organization), and the National Police. Would-be officers must pass the Shah's personal scrutiny.

The Army was, in a sense, responsible for the Pahlavis. The Shah's father, Reza Shah, a jack-booted Cossack colonel in the Persian Army, shouldered his way to the imperial throne with military support. When the British and the Russians occupied Iran in 1941, they deposed Reza Shah (who died in exile in Mauritius). His young son was shy and nervous, not apparently disposed to be an armor-plated dictator like Reza Shah.

But the near disaster of 1953 changed him. From it, he learned a hard lesson in political survival. For a start, he reorganised the armed forces. SAVAK was formed and trained by the CIA and Mossad, the Israeli Intelligence Service. Unashamedly, the Shah began to take leaves out of Mussadiq's book of reforms.

The result was the famous White Revolution. The power of the landlords was broken and some land distributed to peasants. Illiteracy was tackled. Women qualify for a vote, they go to universities.

"We Iranians are entering a great era," the Shah murmurs now, staring tensely past you at a point rather high up on his study wall. "Iran will be one of the world's serious countries. Everything you can dream about will be achieved here . . ."

He dreams of a new Aryan Empire, inspired by the great ancient kings Cyrus and Darius. But it will be an Iran, like Japan, full of nuclear reactors, steel mills, giant airports, petrochemical plants, huge port complexes, industrial satellite towns. He is, if you like, a fanatic with a voice as soft as steel wool and a gentle, courteous manner. He rules alone, trusting no one. (In 1976 the CIA made a close study of the Shah and found that he was a megalomaniac, which is rather like working out that bees buzz.)

Presumably he relaxes when he is skiing or driving a fast car or at the control of an ultra-modern speedboat on the Caspian sea. But, from his dawn fruit juice, toast and coffee over the major Western newspapers to his evening cowboy film or game of cards with his wife, Queen Farah, he is obsessed with his multi-billion dollar Vision for Iran.

The Vision — to make Iran the world's fifth most powerful state — must, he thinks, be achieved quickly. Its enemies must be overwhelmed by the delights of a prodigious progress before they can wreck it. Meanwhile constant police vigilance is maintained against internal enemies, and against outside enemies an almost unbelievable mountain of non-nuclear weaponry.

Beseiged

In the end the Pahlavy dynasty, i.e. the Shah or his 17-year-old son, Crown Prince Reza, in whose favor he wishes to abdicate quite soon (he is 58), will probably stand or fall by the success or failure of a glorious dream besieged by horrifying cross-purposes.

Something about that Great Plunge Forward is likely to offend some part of Iranian society. For example, how do you build an almost instant Iranian Japan without the skilled, robot-like Japanese? Iran is one-third peasant, 60 per cent illiterate. "Bring in Americans," is the Shah's answer. So now there are thousands of high-salaried, strident Americans and their wives (and other foreigners) insisting on flats, cars, washing-machines, TV. The cultural clash is appalling. Because of it, prices are heading for Outer Space. And, seeking a reason for it, poorer Iranians and the anti-American Left combine to blame the Shah.

It is ironic that the recent outbursts of violence have come at a time when the Shah has been demonstrating a relatively greater liberality. According to people in Amnesty International, there has been a quite remarkable change. The International Red Cross has been able to visit political prisoners in about 20 Iranian jails. Detainees are now being tried in civil courts according to proper legal prodecures — something that has never happened before.

While it is true that there is far less systematic torture, torture is still reported. Intellectuals are still harassed, even if not so much. There have been many arrests during the riots. But it shows perhaps that the Shah, a proud and stubborn man, has finally begun to heed international protests and admit past inhumanities.

In any case, the new violence has spotlighted a few salient factors. They have reemphasized the loneliness of the Shah, a man who sadly admits he has few friends and that he can hardly trust a soul. It has demonstrated Persian churlishness and suspicion of their ruler's visions. A little relaxation is either too much or too little for a bored intellectual population in a cramped society. Clearly the oil money has gone corruptly into too many middle-class pockets. Clearly, the money has bewildered an ancient society.

"Who can guarantee me the future?" the Shah asks plaintively. Maybe the supernatural powers this immensely complex man so fervently believes in will sustain him. At any rate, if the Pahlavis go, his successor is less likely to be a democratic parliamentarian than a fire-eating, Qadhafi-type Pan Aryan with visions of his own.

In Praise of Shoppies

By ROBERT BOYLE

(Boyle is publisher of The Guardian weekly newspaper of Pottstown, Pa. He wrote this for the New York Times.)

Every man wants his son to be somewhat of a clone, not in features but in footsteps. As he grows you also age, and your goals and amibitions — winning the Pulitzer Prize, writing the great best-selling novel — become more unattainable. You begin to realize that life's greatest prizes will never be yours.

But, ah, your boy. In your footsteps he could achieve what you hoped to achieve. Then his successes would be your successes, and his accomplishments would bring you your greatest joys.

That's what you want. That's what you hope for. But footsteps can be muddied and they can go off in different directions.

In a son you can recognize some of yourself. His misconduct was your misconduct years ago. And then there is the part of him that you don't recognize. He's a stranger in personality and talent.

My son, Jody — my mom says he looks exactly like I did when I was 17 — has hated school since day one in kindergarten. Homework was something to be ignored. Science projects always waited until the last moment. Book reports weren't to be written until the final threat.

I've been a newspaperman all of my adult life. My wife is a registered nurse who has added to her education throughout the years, and my daughter has a bachelor's degree in English and is working toward her master's.

But Jody?

When he entered grade 10 he became a vocational-technical student. They're called "shoppies" or "motorheads" by the rest of the students. When a young secretary in my office first referred to him as a shoppie I was shocked. "Hey, he's a good kid," I wanted to say. "He's smart, a good kid, really." To me the term was derogatory.

But I learned during the past two years that shoppies or motorheads are, indeed, different. They herd, these kids. They usually have dirty hands, and there always are grease-stained coveralls strewn around.

And they don't make honor rolls.

But being the parents of a shoppie is an experience in education itself. We who labor in clean shirts, behind typewriters in sterile offices, aren't the free spirits that shoppies are. Nor do we have the abilities that they have.

* * *

The realization that a shoppie is talented, bright, and, perhaps best of all, happy, comes slowly.

I began to learn this when my son wrecked his car. The cost to repair it was estimated at $800. "Hey, I can fix it," he said. I was skeptical. "Crazy Ed will help me," he pleaded.

I walked into the house and said to my wife, "He wants a kid named Crazy Ed to help him fix it."

"My God," she replied.

But we let him go ahead. We had nothing to lose.

Crazy Ed turned out to be a nice, personable, good-looking young man who got his nickname because he went swimming on a winter day. He and Crazy Ed, along with a herd of other motorheads, fixed the car. They got parts from a junkyard, and ability from vo-tech classes. The cost was $25 instead of $800.

Since that first repair job, he has replaced the clutch in my jeep, usually a $150 job, for $16. A broken air-conditioner, a balky washer and a nontoasting toaster have been fixed. Neighbors and co-workers trust their car repairs to him.

In addition, he has become a printer for me. He can set type, paste up ads and use the huge camera used in newspaper production.

Shoppies also have unusual instincts. If one breaks down in the middle of a night on a lonely road, you can bet another shoppie will come by. Let one open a hood, and within a half hour 20 are in, under and around the car. It's as if some signal, unknown and unheard by nonshoppies, was sounded.

These kids are happiest when tinkering. They joke and laugh and are living in their own relaxed world. They're deceptive, too, because despite their greasy hands their minds are bright and absorbent.

I learned a lot from my shoppie: that publishers without printers would be useless, that engineers need mechanics, and that builders need welders. But, most important, I learned that fathers don't need clones in footsteps or anywhere else.

My son may never make the school honor roll.

But he made mine.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

The U.S.-Canadian "fishing war" heated up slightly in Victoria provincial court with two fines and confiscations Tuesday and two more on Wednesday.

Fined $500 on Wednesday were 39-year-old Jack Pearson of Raymond, Wash., who had a $497.80 catch forfeited, and 63-year-old Melvin Carlson of Seattle, who lost a $80.25 catch.

Both were about one mile inside Canadian waters off Port Renfrew and were arrested by the Canadian fisheries vessel Atlin Post early Tuesday.

Pearson told Judge William Ostler he was treated well by Canadian fisheries officers and said he drifted over because it took him 5½ hours to pull in his nets instead of the usual 1½ hours.

Carlson said he had been a fisherman for 50 years and couldn't understand how he could have scaled his position wrong.

Ostler suggested it may have been because he was chasing fish.

On Tuesday, 62-year-old William Willis Brashler of Marryville, Wash., was fined $500 and had his catch sold for $194.95 forfeited to the Crown and 55-year-old Garlyn Guy Tupper of Port Angeles was fined the same amount and had his $417.80 catch seized.

* * *

A 20-year-old Sidney man who appeared before Ostler and was fined a total of $485 Wednesday for driving and motor-vehicle offences went before Judge Blake Allan later the same day and received 45-day, concurrent sentences for two more driving offences.

Trevor Frank White, 9905 Fifth, pleaded guilty to driving June 9 while suspended, driving without valid insurance and without licence plates and was fined $200, $250 and $35, respectively.

Then, before Judge Allan, he pleaded guilty to impaired driving and driving while suspended July 22 and was given the jail term.

* * *

A 29-year-old man was told by Ostler he was incapable of handling himself, let alone a car, before receiving a 20-day, intermittent sentence for impaired driving and driving while suspended.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang said William Christopher Sunter, 2645 Blanshard, was stopped after being followed for about five miles July 18 by Colwood RCMP.

Lang said Sunter was convicted May 31, 1976, of impaired driving and Feb. 1, 1977, of driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 and was fined $400 and $600.

"What about the public?" Ostler asked Sunter, who told the court he was supporting a common-law wife and three children. "What's to prevent this from happening again?"

* * *

Fined for drinking-driving were: Frank Edward Greenfield, 18, of 582 Langholm, $850; Linda Margaret Berard, 22, of 1399 Stanley, $450; Thomas Gordon Witwicki, 30, of 896 Brock, $400; David Randall McDonald, 49, of 3651 Revelstoke, $400; and Wendy Janet Moffat, 31, of 1830 Fern, $350.

In addition, Greenfield was fined $200 for refusing a breath test demand made by Colwood RCMP.

Nov. 20 Start for Drug Hearing

The preliminary hearing into a charge against 15 men of conspiracy to import 13 tons of marijuana worth $33 million was set Wednesday to begin Nov. 20 in Victoria provincial court.

They were charged after the July 15 drug bust off the west coast of Vancouver Island near Shelter Inlet, 32 kilometres northwest of Tofino, which involved about 50 RCMP officers, 600 to 700 Canadian armed forces men and two naval vessels, HMCS Kootenay and Terra Nova.

Twelve of the 15 followed the lead of the other three who earlier elected trial by judge and jury.

Judge William Ostler fixed a two-week period beginning Nov. 20 for the start of a four-to-six-week hearing to ascertain whether there is enough evidence to send the case to trial.

However, defence lawyers balked at the two-week period beginning Dec. 11 because one of the Vancouver lawyers is expected to be on holidays and that period remains in doubt. Ostler also said that one week in January, 1979, may also be available if needed.

The accused are: Ronald Cecil Spurrell, 30, of Surrey; Patrick Joseph Murphy, 30, formerly of Newfoundland and now of Limerick, Ireland; John Mobley Doss, 28, also formerly of Newfoundland and now of Dillon, Colorado; Garth Clarence Sexton, 27, of Vancouver, Frederick Charles Scott, 27, of Vancouver; Edwin Floyd Terry, 28, a Canadian now from Charlottesville, Virginia; Neil Maxwell Kennedy, 26; of Toronto; Terrance Gerard Trainor, 28, of Langley; Allen Valenti, 36, of Qualicum Beach; Melville Douglas Balfour, 31, of Lasqueti Island; Kevin Gerard Gushue, 26, of Surrey; Gordon Barlow Tait, 32, of North Vancouver; Fred MacIntosh Tait, 35, of North Vancouver; Frank Piersanti, 34, of Montreal; and Robert Sherman Miller, 33, of North Vancouver.

Three of the men, Frederick MacIntosh Tait, Spurrell and Murphy, have been denied bail; seven, Kennedy, Trainor, Valenti, Balfour, Gushue, Gordon Barlow Tait and Miller, have received bail ranging up to $30,000, and Doss, Sexton, Scott, Terry and Piersanti have yet to apply for bail.

PORT ANGELES FOR MAGGIE?

Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy should use the Princess Marguerite to solve a traffic bottleneck at Port Angeles, Victoria Chamber of Commerce executive vice president Mel Cooper said Wendesday.

He told a joint chamber-Visitors Information Centre meeting at The Empress that hundreds of tourists who want to come to Victoria are being turned away because the Coho can't handle them all.

Cooper said the problem could be solved with a midday sailing of the Marguerite between Victoria and Port Angeles.

This would mean the Marguerite would have to leave Victoria for Seattle at 5:30 p.m. instead of 4:30 p.m.

"But this would give visitors an extra hour to enjoy the attractions of Victoria."

Cooper said tourists who miss the last sailing to Victoria decide to go someplace else because there is not enough overnight accommodation at Port Angeles for them.

He said Mrs. McCarthy is putting a lot of effort into attracting tourists and now it's important that she make it possible for them to reach Victoria.

Mrs. McCarthy is in charge of B.C. Steamships, which operates the Marguerite.

Cooper also praised Victoria Mayor Mike Young for his indication he will crack down on Causeway hawkers by next summer.

Cooper said the chamber approves of hawkers in principle but by letting the situation get out of control, city hall had created more problems than goodwill.

Executives, Lawyers In Crash

VANCOUVER (CP) — An annual fishing trip by nine business executives and lawyers was cut short this week when their chartered plane crashed at Powell River airport.

Two men were taken to hospital and later released, while the others suffered minor injuries when their twin-engine aircraft broke in two on the side of the runway after failing to get airborne.

Alcan vice-president John Hale of Montreal, and Vancouver lawyer Douglas McK. Brown were treated in Powell River hospital for minor injuries and released.

Also aboard the plane were former MacMillan Bloedel president Ralph Shaw, former senator John Nichol, lawyer Thomas Ladner, travel service executive Cornelius Burke and Vancouver businessmen Peter Evans, Herbert McArthur and Lawrence Culter.

The pilot was Albert Forth of Richmond.

Canada Needs Election, — Bennett

KELOWNA (CP) — The indecision over whether there should be a federal election is compounding the uncertainty over Canada's economic future, Premier Bill Bennett said today.

Bennett told a news conference he feels Prime Minister Trudeau should call an election and clear the air so the people will know the government in power has a clear mandate.

Because of the uncertainty in the economy, Canadians don't need the added uncertainty of speculation over an election, he said.

The premier said it will take several years to sort out Canada's economic problems.

"There can be no instant economic miracle," he said. "But there will have to be a term of responsibility."

Bennett said he has been told by a number of foreign businessmen that the only places in North America they would consider investing in right now are the United States, Alberta and British Columbia.

The fact that they consider Alberta and B.C. with such optimism even though they are part of Canada as a whole, he said, "should give pause for thought."

It should also prompt Ottawa to give more serious consideration to the economic proposals of the western provinces, he said.

Identification the Key In Robbery of Cabbie

Three defence lawyers were to give their summations today in a county court trial in which two women and a man are accused of robbery with violence involving $60 from a taxi driver May 8 in Colwood.

The prosecution closed its case Wednesday against Kathryn Eileen Piercy, 23, and Frank Woodrow Richards, 31, of Victoria, and Delores Isobel Granfield, 23, of Colwood.

Crown counsel Peter Birkett conceded that identification is the principal issue and the only witness to identify the three accused as the trio who beat and robbed him was taxi driver Shingara Sunner, 25.

He argued before Judge T.G. Darling that Sunner was clearly assaulted by three persons, that he had $60 to $65 in his coat pocket, that the coat was torn and found in a ditch and the money was gone. A daylight search did not reveal the money.

He said Sunner is a witness who ought to be believed and when all the evidence was considered, there was evidence upon which Darling could properly and reasonably conclude that the three accused persons were the trio who robbed him in the early hours of May 8 on Ocean Boulevard.

Concluding his evidence Wednesday, Sunner said he told police a photograph they showed him of a woman might be the same or not as one of those who robbed him but it looked like the same woman.

During cross-examination, he agreed he told the preliminary hearing earlier that he had picked out a photo of a woman who looked like the one sitting beside him in the taxi but it wasn't her.

Sunner told the trial it was Granfield who was sitting next to him in the taxi.

Sam Benefits from Disasters

TORONTO (CP) — When a ship's cargo is damaged by sea water or a store is hit by fire, Sam Green will likely benefit from it.

Green is the amiable, 68-year-old president of Continental Salvage Co. Ltd. of Toronto, one of Canada's best known firms of insurance salvors.

His firm buys the damaged goods that become the property of insurance companies when claims have been settled.

"We'll buy almost anything, except automobiles, from the insurers," said Green. His warehouse on Front St. on the waterfront is jammed with goods ranging from canned tuna to clothing, furniture and appliances.

Continental's inventory averages about $750,000.

Recently, the inventory included a large stock of books which the company bought after a truck carrying them turned over on a Toronto highway.

"We retail at half of the legitimate retail price," said Green. "We don't fool around with the prices. In fact, most goods still carry the original labels and price tags. . ."

Green, recently honored for 50 years of service withthe privately-owned salvage company, said the key to success is knowing where the goods can be sold at a specific time and at what price.

"It's not as easy as it might appear," he said.

"I've been here since 1928 but if I were to take six months off and go to Florida I'd be no good at it. You've got to keep on top of the markets and know where you can get something before you buy it."

Continental handles goods from about 250-to-300 losses a year "ranging in value from several hundred dollars to several hundred thousand dollars."

Its biggest single allotment of goods came from a $1.7-million inventory of furniture salvaged from an Ottawa store fire.

National Seafood

National Sea Products Ltd. reports net income of $5,739,000 or earnings of $3.80 per common share for the six months ended July 1 this year compared to $1,011,000 and 64 cents a share for the same six months a year earlier. The company reports sales for the January-July period this year topped $97.2 million, about 32 per cent higher than sales for the same period of 1977. It reported purchasing 146.8 million pounds of fish, a 40-per cent increase. Company president W. O. Morrow said the "significant increase in net income is largely attributable to better fish landings and continuation of firm markets and favorable foreign exchange rates. For the remainder of the year we expect the market and foreign exchange rates to remain favorable. We do, however, expect a fall off in trawler landings as many fish quotas will be reached before year end."

Conventures

Net income for the first six months of the 1978 fiscal year ended June 30 amounted to $792,045 or 16.88 cents a share, Conventures Ltd. said.

The company said in a statement that this compares with $404,426 or 9.82 cents a share for the same period in 1977.

The final half of the year is expected to record a large increase over the first half, partly as a result of the projected acquisition of Ashland Oil Canada by Kaiser Resources Ltd.

Conventures, which held stock in Ashland Canada, could receive about $2.75 million, the company said.

Thomson

Thomson Newspapers Ltd. has announced net income for the six months ended June 30 of $25,530,806 or 51.1 cents a share compared with $21,011,992 or 41.9 cents a share for the first half of last year. Sales for the first half were $144,717,527 compared with $121,381,683.

Algoma Steel

Algoma Steel Corp. Ltd. reported higher levels in all phases of operation, including production and sales, for the first half of 1978, but said earnings would have to rise eve higher to achieve an adequate return on invested capital.

"The non-publication of competitive newspapers in Montreal and Quebec City has contributed significantly to the increase in sales and net income realized during this period and the third quarter," said a company statement.

Two Montreal dailies went on strike in October, 1977, until June 30, while the Quebec City daily Le Soleil was on strike from August, 1977, to July.

School Board Denies 'Catholics Only' Policy

KELOWNA (CP) — The chairman of the Catholic school board in this Okanagan city denied Wednesday that his board received a church directive to remove non-Catholic teachers from the board's schools.

Sandy Perry said in an interview that local Catholic schools now have three non-Catholic teachers and are hiring another.

He was responding to a Vancouver Sun story which said Bishop W. Emmett Doyle had asked that non-Catholic teachers be removed from schools in the Nelson diocesé which includes Kelowna.

The newspaper said former chairman Bert Sperling had received correspondance from the bishop last year. Perry was vice-chairman at that time.

"The bishop did not say we had to remove them (non-Catholic teachers)," Perry said. It's up to the school board to endeavor to employ Catholics if at all possible.

"The prime concern is to have good teachers. All we're saying is it's a preference if at all possible."

Executives Fired In Shuffle

VANCOUVER (CP) — White Pass and Yukon Corp. has dismissed nine senior executives in a major reorganizational shuffle.

The integrated transportation company, which has been experiencing financial difficulties, declined to name the employees dropped.

R. A. Hubber-Richard, company chairman, said in an interview the reorginization in the Vancouver office was prompted by a significant decline in revenue due to the loss of Cassiar Asbestos Corp. tonnage.

Cassiar closed its Clinton Creek, Yukon, mine earlier this year.

News of the dismissals came as the company announced a first-half loss of $49,000 or 12 cents a share compared with a profit of $597,000 or 22 cents a share in the corresponding period last year.

Economy Optimism Unrealistic: Stupich

NDP finance critic, Dave Stupich said Wednesday Finance Minister Evan Wolfe is hiding his head in the sand if he thinks B.C.'s economy is healthy.

The Nanaimo MLA pointed to a number of factors supporting the independent Conference Board of Canada's prediction that B.C. will be the only province in the country to suffer a decline in economic activity this year.

Wolfe Monday issued a press release objecting to the board's analysis of the B.C. situation. He questioned the board's revised figures from an earlier, more optimistic forecast, and listed several indicators he said pointed to a strong B.C. growth.

But Stupich says Wolfe has lost touch with reality if he believes B.C. is booming.

The former finance minister noted B.C. Hydro, the Crown corporation for which Wolfe is responsible, admitted only last week in its quarterly report that its growth rate is somewhat lower than anticipated.

"Wolfe must have approved the report issued by the agency for which he is responsible. For him to have made yesterday's press release shows he is talking out of both sides of his mouth," Stupic said.

Stupich also pointed to the story in Tuesday's Times in which Manpower regional manager Stan Purdy said Victoria is heading for a drastic unemployment increase.

The poor economic picture is province-wide, Stupich said.

Wolfe said the government not only is failing to respond to the crisis by developing programs to stimulate the economy, but even worse, is faling to recognize the problem exists.

Inland Gas Prices Up 2%

VANCOUVER (CP) — Customers of Inland Natural Gas Co. Ltd. face higher prices starting Sept. 1 as a result of a two-per-cent interim rate increase granted by the British Columbia Energy Commission.

Sixty-five thousand homeowners in the Interior will pay an extra $5 a year. Some 9,000 commercial customers will also pay higher rates but the increases will vary because each industrial contract is worked out separately.

Inland will apply for a permanent increase of nine per cent, including the interim increase. If approved, residential and commercial customers will pay about $24 more a year.

A public hearing will be held Nov. 7 in Penticton on both the interim and permanent increases.

New PNE Stadium

VANCOUVER (CP) — Plans for construction of a new 60,000-seat stadium in the city were unveiled at a meeting of the Pacific National Exhibition (PNE) Board of Directors Wednesday.

The board said in a news release that the stadium would be part of a new complex for the city's PNE grounds which would also include major exhibit space and agricultural facilities for the annual fair.

If the project receives necessary approval and funding, the board said construction could begin in October, 1979 and be completed three years later.

The board estimated the complex would cost $163.5 million to complete if construction began next year.

Ferry Ailment: Boom or Bust

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Victoria and the ferry system have the same problem, says B.C. Ferries general manager Charles Gallagher.

"Too many people in July and August — not enough the rest of the year. Because we have the same problem, we should work together to find the solution."

Gallagher says Victoria should call a halt to promoting its summer tourist season and concentrate all its efforts on the other 10 months.

"I don't mean we should chase people away in the summer. But the numbers can't keep increasing. We can't handle them on the ferries and Victoria can't handle them either."

In addition, he warned, Victoria's citizens will become angry if too many tourists plug up the city in July and August, creating longer line-ups on the ferries and congestion downtown.

"Our citizens are a neglected constituency. We have to consider their wishes as well as the business community."

Gallagher said he is convinced Victoria can be promoted as a tourist destination in all months of the year, even during the winter.

Meanwhile, the ferry system must do something soon to handle the increasing flood of visitors arriving during the peak summer months.

His suggestions:

—B.C. Ferries should consider entering the bus business to reduce vehicle traffic.

—A reservation system must be established soon.

Gallagher said he got the idea about a B.C. Ferries bus fleet when he was analysing difficulties of transporting tourists to the Gulf Islands during summer months.

"The problem is people have no way of getting around if they don't bring their car. So I thought, well, why not set up a bus system of our own. Then I thought it might be a good idea for the whole ferry service. Look at it this way, compare the cost of buying 10 buses against the high cost of an additional ferry."

He said a vehicle reservation system would have to be tried soon so people can be certain of travelling at the time they want. At the same time, the total number of cars using the service must somehow be reduced.

But the most important immediate problem is the boom and bust cycle of ferry traffic, he said.

For example, between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen the ferries carried 155,753 vehicles in August but only 65,307 in October.

And in both months the system had the same number of ferries and workers available.

It is not practical to hire people to work on ferries during summer time only because of extensive training needed in connection with safety measures. The vast majority of employees work 12 months of the year.

As a result, the ferry system loses money 10 months of the year and shows a profit only in July and August.

He said it would be impossible to try to increase this profit by putting on even more summer sailings because costs would escalate faster than revenues.

The solution, he said, is to make better use of the half-empty ferries during the other 10 months.

He said B.C. Ferries began work on this problem during the past winter with package tours from Seattle that caught on very well. But they will need additional promotion this year to make them work.

"Victoria has to be sold as a destination and that means attractions and events. You can't sell it as a cruise when it's only a one hour and forty minute trip. When people think of a cruise they are thinking of a trip of more than 12 hours with a swimming pool and disco. No, Victoria has to be sold as a destination."

The best market, he said, is in Washington State. Promoting in Vancouver is fine but it is little more than trading tourist for tourist because there are as many Victorians going to the mainland as there are Vancouver people coming here.

He said a recent survey of ferry traffic showed that in June 80 per cent of vehicles on the ferries have B.C. licence plates. Only 7.6 per cent come from west coast states and 7.7 per cent from other Canadian provinces. A very tiny fraction come from U.S. points or from outside the country.

By contrast, the survey showed that in August only 66 per cent of the plates were from B.C. while 14.6 per cent were from other Canadian provinces and 11.7 per cent were from west coast states and 4.6 per cent were from other U.S. points.

This is a better mix and this August pattern now must be transferred to other months as well.

Crewman Lost at Sea After Taking Tumble

A crew member of the French vessel SS Maryland is missing and presumed drowned after he fell overboard Tuesday night about 150 miles west of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

An Argus long-range patrol aircraft from CFB Comox assisted by the American merchant ship Philadelphia, conducted a nine-hour search.

Meanwhile, a light plane with two people aboard is still missing on Vancouver Island.

Names of the missing people are being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

The identities of three passengers aboard a light plane who were killed when the plane crashed Tuesday near Amai Point, about 56 kilometres west of Zeballos, are also being withheld.

A third flying accident — the crash of a chartered plane at the Powell River Airport on Monday — ended a planned fishing trip for a group of Vancouver businessmen.

Two men were put in hospital briefly and eight others received minor injuries.

Group Stranded In Snowstorm

ESTES PARK, Colo. (UPI) — Mid-August ordinarily is not a time associated with snow plows. Nor is it common for campers to become stranded by snowfall at this time of year.

But Tuesday the snow plows were clearing ice and snow from Trail Ridge Road over the Continental Divide and a mountain rescue team was helping evacuate the remaining three members of a church group that became stranded in a freak storm which dumped up to six inches of snow.

Night School Rush is On

Between 8,000 and 10,000 persons are expected to register in Camosun College's evening community education courses.

The fall progam appeared in Wednesday's Times.

Supervisor of operations Graham Beal said 100 persons lined up Wednesday before the wickets opened at 8:30 and the brochure even came out.

A total of 564 people have registered so far, up 18 per cent from last year.

A course in mixology (bartending) filled up in two hours.

Beal said commercial courses like typing and shorthand usually fill up in the first week.

Beal says 95 per cent of the classes are the same price as last year.

Courses are offered in a variety of programs including vocational and technical training, business management, commercial and business training, art, hobbies, crafts, languages, homemaking, reacreation, music, and acting.

Unheralded Rocks Belting Burrards

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

Coach Ross McDonald of Vancouver Burrards perhaps said it best of all after Victoria Shamrocks defeated his Burrards 15-8 in the fifth game of their Western Lacrosse Association semi-final series at Memorial Arena Wednesday night.

"They're hungry," he said of the Shamrocks. "They are getting the big game from the unheralded players, and we're not," he added, as the Rocks took a 3-2 lead in the best-of-seven series.

"We've held Ron MacNeil pretty well," he said'. "We've closed down on Norm Baker, and we've managed to hold Ivan Thompson too," he added. "But somebody else has come up big for them, while we haven't had anybody."

Wednesday's heroes for the Rocks were veteran forward Joe McCrea and first-year goalkeeper Scott Marshall.

McCrea scored four goals for the first time this season while Marshall came off the bench to replace Larry Smeltzer after the first period and hold Burrards to just two goals in the second stanza and none in the final session.

For the second time in the series here, the game ended in a brawl of sorts between Victoria fans and Burrard players in the runway leading to the Vancouver dressing room.

The mixup was predictable as Ward Sanderson of Burrards became embroiled in a post-game fight with Gerry Cadwallader of the Shamrocks after cross-checking the Victoria player along the boards just before the final whistle. Both player received game misconducts.

Police were in attendance and nobody was injured.

In the first game of the series here Shamrock trainer Dave Swanbeck was hospitalized after a fight with Bob Holmes of Burrards. Holmes was assessed a "substantial fine" for that outburst by WLA commissioner Roy Burton, who warned then that unprovoked incidents wouldn't be tolerated in future.

Burton was at Wednesday's game but made no announcement of action against the combatants.

Dave Tasker of Burrards scored the first goal of the game on the first shot of the game but Dan Green, who had sparked the Shamrocks with five goals in their 12-11 victory at Vancouver, Tuesday, tied the score little more than a minute later.

And that's the way the first period was played, even-Stephen, 6-6, and the score tied six times.

It was that close at the time, but not for long.

Green scored his second goal to start the second period and that put the Shamrocks ahead to stay. They led 11-8 after two and were in full command with a strong defensive display.

Marshall, meanwhile, was sharp and made successive saves on shots from Bill Rawson and Taki Vohalis, both of whom were in the clear, with Green serving a penalty early in the third period. And that probably took the starch out of the visitors as Marshall went on make 18 saves.

Dave Evans and Brad Berrow, who replaced Evans late in the third period, blocked 39 shots for Burrards while Marshall and Smeltzer had 34 saves.

If Thompson and MacNeil had been shut down by Burrards earlier, as suggested by McDonald, it wasn't noticeable this time.

Sixth game will be played in Vancouver, Saturday, with a seventh, if necessary, here on Sunday.

Times Tennis Tournament Wraps Up At Henderson

By MAX LOW
Times Staff

A physiotherapist, a lawyer, a would-be PE teacher and a self-styled "tennis bum" are in the running for the men's singles crown when the fifth annual Victoria Times Public Parks Tennis tournament wraps up this weekend.

The last four semi-finalists from a starting field of 128 men are:

JACK EBBELS — A 30-year-old lawyer from Regina who moved to Victoria in May of last year, he is making his first appearance in the Times Tourney. A one-time tennis instructor who has been playing since he was eight, Jack competed a lot as a junior but hasn't played much in the last 10 years. "I'm just trying to get it all back together," he says with a grin, "before things start atrophying!"

PERRY EVANS — A 19-year-old who won the Times Tourney junior boys' singles title last year, he is in for the second summer in a row and believes he has a good chance of winning the men's event this time. An all-round athlete who played Junior B hockey with Victoria Ray's Red Wings, Perry says that after working a while for Olympic Sporting Goods he's now "a tennis bum."

PAUL TIESSEN — A 28-year-old physiotherapist at the Royal Jubilee Hospital, he came to Canada only eight and-a-half months ago from Holland. In this his first Times Tourney, Paul has been winning convincingly, confesses that he has played "a lot of tennis, including many tournaments," in Holland, and could well be the dark horse in this event.

CHRIS FORSTER — A 20-year-old who plans to go to the University of Victoria in the fall and hopes one day to be a PE teacher, he found he got on well with children while working in summer programs with the Victoria Parks Branch. This is the second time in the Times Tourney for Chris — he was runner-up to Greg Booth in last year's men's singles final — and he hopes to win it this time.

Forster reached the semi-finals with a 9-7 victory over young Richard Folk, who is through to the semis in the junior boys' event. Ebbels got past Peter Wilson, 6-1, 3-6, 6-2; Tiessen beat Peter Harrison, 6-2, 6-0; and Evans won by default over Kim Blank.

In the semi-finals, which start at 1 p.m. Saturday at Henderson Park, it will be Ebbels versus Evans and Tiessen against Forster.

The men's final, along with the finals of the other three events in the tourney, will be played Sunday, also at Henderson Park and also starting at 1 p.m.

In the event of rain, we hope to move the finals indoors to The Tennis Place with the co-operation of Oak Bay tennis co-ordinator Roger Skillings.

Roger, a former Canadian junior champion, has a lot to say in favor of tournaments that are for average public parks players and not just for club stars.

He is full of praise for the concept behind the Times event and says Oak Bay is trying to do very much the same thing with its mixed doubles tourney in the Bubble this weekend.

"We want people to realize they don't have to be super duper to compete in tennis tournaments," Roger explains. "You don't even have to win, just take part."

"There are four levels of play in this mixed doubles tourney and the entries show that people are starting to know that tennis tournaments are no longer just for the Hartleys, the Smythes and the Skillings."

Tough Timber Defence Puts Caps on Sidelines

Times News Services

Two first-half goals and an extremely tough defence carried Portland Timbers to a 2-1 win over Vancouver Whitecaps Wednesday night and a two-game sweep of their North American Soccer League playoff series.

With the win, before Vancouver's largest crowd of the season, 32,800, Portland now advances to the National Conference final against New York Cosmos.

Clyde Best and Willie Anderson scored the Portland goals, both on counter attacks against the flow of play. Steve Kember scored early in the second half for Vancouver.

However, Portland goalkeeper Mick Poole got a hand on Hector's close-in attempt and stopped Campbell's header with his outstretched leg.

With Vancouver pushing forward again, Anderson took a quick-breaking pass from Stewart Scullion and beat goalkeeper Phil Parkes with another low shot from about 20 yards out.

Kember pulled the Whitecaps to within a goal by first-timing an Alan Hinton corner kick past Poole at 2:11 of the second half.

Vancouver outshot Portland 17-9 and was assessed 18 fouls to the Timbers 10. Poole, who was outstanding in Portland's 1-0 win in the first game of the series, had another good night stopping seven shots. Parkes made three saves for Vancouver.

Vancouver, which finished in first place in the Western Division of the National Conference, had defeated the second place Timbers in both meetings during the regular season.

Franz Beckenbauer rescued the Cosmos at East Rutherford, N.J., scoring the decisive goal in the sixth round of a shootout Wednesday night to give the defending playoff champions a 1-0 victory over Minnesota Kicks, who had scored a 9-2 upset in the series opener.

Giorgio Chinaglia and Dennis Tueart scored two goals apiece in the regulation game as the Cosmos defeated the Kicks 4-0 and forced the mini-game, which the Cosmos won on Beckenbauer's goal.

Fort Lauderdale Strikers advanced to the American Conference final Wednesday by defeating Detroit Express on George Nanchoff's goal at 20:36 of a sudden-death mini-game.

Earlier, the Express had won the regular game 1-0 to deadlock the semi-final series.

Percentage Playing Pays For Mussels

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Bend Timber Hawks finally showed their hitting power but Victoria Mussels played the percentages Wednesday to sweep their three-game Northwest Baseball League series at Royal Athletic Park.

The exciting 7-6 victory was Victoria's fourth straight and the 10th in their last 12 starts.

The Hawks came into Victoria sporting a remarkable .299 team batting average but Victoria pitching silenced the Bend bats with 6-1 and 20-6 victories at the start of the week.

Wednesday, however, Bend's hitters came alive. They hammered out 14 hits, erased a four-run Victoria advantage but still couldn't produce a victory.

Bend racked up five of its hits in a five-run sixth inning to turn a 5-1 deficit into a 6-5 lead. Victoria, however, tied the game on Doug Morganti's sixth home run of the season and then pushed across the winning run in the eight with the help of a sacrifice and singles by John Bush and Paul Kirsch.

Still, it wasn't over. With one out, Bend's Eric Attaway singled and Victoria field manager Jim Chapman quickly played the percentage game.

He yanked southpaw Scott Harding so that the righthanded Roy Moretti might pitch to lefthanded-hitting Al Armstead. That ploy didn't work. Armstead lined out his third straight hit and the Mussels remained in hot water with runners on first and second and one out.

Southpaw Dave Cheadle rushed in from the bullpen and struck out designated hitter Dana Berry, a southpaw-swinger. With Cheadle getting the important second out, Chapman then brought in righthander Brian Peterson to throw to Fred DiVito, another righthanded batter.

Bend manager Ed Nottle countered by inserting southpaw-hitting Jim Bennett in as a pinch-hitter. Bennett tagged Peterson's first pitch into deep centre but Steve Kasunic made the catch against the fence to end the threat and the game.

Armstead, Attaway and Bob Markham each got three hits for Bend while Morganti, Greg Schultz, Mike Carey (with a single and his fifth homer) and Bush banged out a pair of hits to spark Victoria's 12-hit attack.

The victory went to Scott Harding, his third against no defeats, in relief of starter Don Rogelstad.

Fortunes Change

The black four-year-old standardbred owned by Prince George Mayor H.A. Moffat came through with an impressive victory in the featured seventh race Wednesday at Sandown Park.

Over Burden won two of the first three Saturday invitationals in the harness-racing meet this season, including a then-record 2:04 4/5 time in the last victory. The opposition got a little tougher in subsequent races and Over Burden finished fourth once, fifth twice and seventh once in the next four outings.

Then a chance to compete at the Condition 4 level, for horses that have won less than $1,250 in their last six starts, brought a change in fortunes.

A camera miss for a victory on Aug. 5 and a great stretch run for show money on Aug. 9 set the stage for Wednesday's performance.

Over Burden, driven by Jim Mohorich, started slowly from the tough No. 7 slot and was last in a strung-out field going through the backstretch for the first time.

Then Mohorich made his move and Over Burden rushed up passing the grandstand and took over the lead from Antique Adios on the clubhouse turn.

From then on, there was no serious challenge as Over Burden went on to finish in 2:03 1/5 — an indication of a return to form.

Keith Linton raised his official win total to 54 for the 43-day-old meeting with a victory behind Callaghan in the eighth. Joe Hudon, runner-up in driver standings, failed to add to his total of 42 victories.

A total of 1,185 patrons wagered $75,561 for the second-best Wednesday of the meet, which has 14 days remaining.

Argos Hit Turning Point When They Showed Up

By Canadian Press

Edmonton Eskimos, with probably their strongest outing of the Canadian Football League season to date, solidified their position as the team to beat in the Western Conference with a 40-3 whipping of Toronto Argonauts on Wednesday night.

The Eskimos, who lost the Grey Cup to Montreal Alouettes on icy turf at Olympic Stadium last November, appear headed for another run at the CFL championship as they moved into sole possession of first place in the West with a 4-1 record.

Kicker Dave Cutler led the scoring attack Wednesday night with 16 points on three field goals, four converts and three singles. Veteran quarterback Tom Wilkinson tossed two touchdown passes and Tom Scott, who hauled in a late scoring strike from Warren Moon besides a first-quarter effort from Wilkinson, ended up with a pair of majors.

Jim Germany and George McGowan scored the other Edmonton touchdowns while Ian Sunter accounted for the Toronto scoring with three singles on wide field-goal attempts.

In the other game Wednesday night, Calgary Stampeders defeated Winnipeg Blue Bombers 29-21.

Toronto was no match for the smooth Edmonton machine, which humiliated the Argos before a crowd of 49,168 at Exhibition Stadium on the opening day of the Canadian National Exhibition.

Wilkinson, who was never bothered or hurried by the Toronto front four, calmly picked the Argos secondary apart for over 200 yards, throwing touchdowns of nine yards to Scott in the first quarter and 18 to George McGowan at the start of the final quarter.

The Eskimos front four, known as Alberta Crude, shut down the Toronto rushing attack right from the start, limiting running back Terry Metcalf to only 22 yards in 11 carries and the Argos to just 60 yards rushing over all.

At Winnipeg, Stampeders' quarterback John Hufnagel completed 14 of 24 passes for 242 yards, as well as scoring on a six-yard keeper late in the second quarter, to lead Calgary past the Blue Bombers before a crowd of 26,259.

The win moved the Stampeders into third place in the Western Conference with a 2-2-1 mark, just ahead of the fourth-place Bombers, who now sport a 2-3 record.

Winless Saskatchewan Roughriders, who fired coach Jim Eddy and replaced him with offensive line coach Walt Posadowsky on Wednesday night, are fifth without a win in five starts.

Errors Hurt A's

Errors played a part in deciding the winner Wednesday as Seaboard Construction nipped Victoria Athletics 2-1 in the opening game of the best-of-seven Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League playoff final at Central Park.

Scott Sinclair scored the winning run in the eighth inning by getting a base hit and rounding the bases on a walk, a sacrifice and two errors.

Lou Vermette had tied things up for Athletics in the seventh after reaching base on the lone Seaboard error. Mike Taaffe was hit by a pitch and singled in by Glen Kilduff to put Seaboard ahead in the opening frame.

The second game of the series is scheduled for 4 p.m. Saturday at Central.

Home-Run Battle

Farmer Construction won what turned out to be strictly a home run battle Wednesday, edging Gorge Hotel 2-1 and squaring the best-of-seven Victoria Senior Amateur Baseball League playoff final 1-1 at Lambrick Park.

Mike Squires of Gorge hit the first of three bases-empty home runs in the top of the fourth inning, but Ron Holmes evened the count with a round-tripper for Farmers in the bottom of the frame.

Then George Pakos rapped his third homer of the playoffs in the seventh inning to seal Farmer victory.

Third game of the series is slated for 6 tonight.

Vikings Start Tour

It was another "first" for University of Victoria Vikings as they departed today on their fourth international rugby tour.

The Vikings, who have previously visited the Fiji Islands and in 1975 played a series of matches in South America, will this time tangle with teams in Yugoslavia, a country that has not yet been visited by Canadian rugby clubs.

Coached by Ian MacLean, the 24-player UVic squad will be away for almost four weeks on the six-game safari that will include games in France, Italy and Yugoslavia, where the Vikings will conclude the playing portion of their trip with a game against a club side in Zagreb, followed by two contests in Dubrovnik, against the national youth team and the national "B" side.

First game for the Victorians is at Tournon, France, on Aug. 23. Then come contests at Grenoble, France, and Venice before they move into Yugoslavia.

Hua Raps Russia, Romania in Fix

BUCHAREST (Reuter) — Chinese leader Hua Kuo-feng has begun his trip to Romania with a thinly-veiled attack on the Soviet Union. The attack is believed to have offended the Kremlin and embarrassed his hosts.

Hours after arriving on the first visit outside Asia for more than 20 years by a Chinese Communist party chairman, Hua told a banquet audience that some big powers are trying to rule the world.

"In Asia, Africa, Latin America and Europe, imperialism (the U.S.) and hegemonism (the Soviet Union) are spreading out their hands all over to infiltrate, undermine and to commit aggression and expansion against some countries," Hua said.

Such language is common coming from Chinese leaders in Peking but diplomats were surprised that Hua was so outspoken in the capital of one of Moscow's allies.

The diplomats said his speech was certain to offend the Kremlin and might embarrass Romania which, while steering an independent foreign-policy course, remains a member of the Soviet-led Warsaw pact and tries to avoid hurting Moscow's feelings.

Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu, who gave the banquet in the Chinese premier's honor, broached the theme of big-power politics in more discreet terms.

"We witness a sharpening contradiction in the world following the growing tendencies to re-divide the zones of influence, to promote the policy of domination in various parts of the world," he said.

Hua arrived in Bucharest Wednesday to a welcome from more than 200,000 people. It was the first European trip by a Chinese Communist chairman since Mao Tse-tung went to Moscow in 1957, before the Sino-Soviet rift opened up.

Hua had talks with Ceausescu on economic ties and world political issues.

Suit Over Grave Mistake

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A woman who says she prayed at the wrong grave for 17 years because she thought her husband was buried there is suing the Roman Catholic bishop of Providence, a church and a cemetery.

Beatrice Daigle of Woonsocket filed the $250,000 damage suit in Superior Court in Providence on Wednesday.

The Church of the Precious Blood in Woonsocket sold Mrs. Daigle the plot in the cemetery in 1961 for $75. The mistake was discovered April 26, when workers opened the grave because Mrs. Daigle wanted to move the remains to another plot, the suit said.

The suit said Mrs. Daigle still suffers "severe emotional trauma and distress."

ISRAELIS RAKED

BEIRUT (UPI) — Lebanon accused Israel today of "base intervention" in its southern border region where Israeli-armed Christian militias have opposed deployment by the Lebanese post-civil war army.

Senior government sources said assistant UN secretary general, Brian Urkharet, would fly to Beirut Friday and then to Jerusalem in an urgent bid to end the impasse.

Second Korchnoi Win?

BAGUIO, Philippines (Reuter) — Challenger Viktor Korchnoi made a flamboyant sacrifice tonight to appear ahead of champion Anatoly Karpov when they adjourned the 13th game of the world chess championship.

The 47-year-old Soviet defector sealed his 41st move in an envelope for opening Friday. Chess authorities considered his pieces are beautifully placed for a crucial win.

Korchnoi sacrificed his rook for a knight and pawn, giving the Soviet champion a technical advantage in material. But Korchnoi's pieces controlled the board when they adjourned. It also appeared he could pick up another pawn which would put him ahead in material as well as position.

Karpov left the hall immediately after making his 41st move. Korchnoi then sat alone at the table pondering for 40 minutes before sealing his 41st move.

This left Korchnoi only 20 minutes to make his first 15 moves Friday. By then both players will have the advantage of a night and day of analysis.

Karpov and Korchnoi agreed to a draw Wednesday in their 12th game. At present each has one win apiece with 10 draws in the race to score six victories, draws not counting.

Korchnoi refuses to speak to Karpov. In their last game they squabbled over who offered the stand-off. Korchnoi said he would become abusive if the champion dared to speak to him again.

Today referee Lothar Schmid told reporters the two men had patched up a frail compromise for tonight's game. But Korchnoi's manager, Mrs Petra Leeuwerick, said nobody had told Korchnoi—and he was likely to explode if the champion spoke.

The tournament began July 18 and is expected to continue for at least three months. The winner gets $350,000; the loser $200,000.

The 27-year-old Karpov gained the championship title in 1974 when American Bobby Fischer refused to defend it.

Pinto Plugs Gas Tank To Regain Lost Sales

DETROIT (UPI) — Ford Motor Co., in an attempt to bolster sagging sales of its subcompact Pinto, has begun an advertising campaign touting the "puncture resistance" of fuel tanks on 1977 and 1978 models.

A company spokesman Wednesday said new Pinto sales have suffered because of adverse publicity surrounding a number of fiery accidents involving older model Pintos.

He said newspaper ads promoting the "redesigned fuel system" in new Pintos are intended to clear up the "widespread confusion" resulting from criticisms of the older cars.

"There has never been a safety question involving 1977 and 1978 models, but a lot of people have the misconception that all Pintos are involved," he said.

Earlier this year, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration declared the fuel tanks on 1971-1976 model Pintos and 1975-1976 model Mercury Bobcats — excluding station wagons — dangerously susceptible to gas leaks and explosions in rear-end collisions.

The agency said it found no fuel tank problems in 1977 and 1978 models.

Federal safety officials began investigating when they learned of a number of deaths resulting from Pinto fires. At least 59 people have died in such accidents since 1975.

Ford, while insisting the cars were no less safe than any other small cars, agreed in June to recall 1.5 million Pintos and Bobcats built before 1977 "to eliminate public concern."

The impact on sales of new Pintos was almost immediate. Sales tumbled 42 percent from June 1 through July 20 compared to the previous year's figures in what company officials said was an obvious but "illogical" reaction to the adverse publicity.

Murder Laid to S.A. Police

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (Reuter) — Three South African policemen have been charged with murdering a black detainee, it was reported today.

The case involves a 22-year-old carpenter, Paulos Cane, who told a magistrate before he died in Natal province last month that he had been beaten by police.

The Rand Daily Mail newspaper said today that three policemen from Hluhluwe — two whites and a black — had been charged with his murder.

It quoted Natal's attorney-general Cecil Rees as saying they will appear in court later in the day. They also are charged with assault, Rees was reported to have said.

Three weeks ago, six policemen and two civilians were charged in Orange Free State with murdering a black security guard who died in a hospital eight days after his arrest on charges of housebreaking.

In the Natal case, Cane died while he was awaiting sentence after pleading guilty to theft.

In Port Elizabeth on Wednesday government pathologist Leendert Von Ieperin acknowledged that some injuries suffered by black detainee Lungile Tabalaza, 20, who dropped to his death from the fifth floor of police headquarters, might have been inflicted before he fell.

Von Ieperin made the admission during cross-examination on the second day on an inquest into the death of Tabalaza.

U.S. TO LIST FOREIGNERS

WASHINGTON (AP) — All foreigners who own or acquire land used for farm or timber production would have to report their holdings to the U.S. agriculture department under legislation approved Wednesday by the House of Representatives agriculture committee.

U.K. Labor Gets Edge

LONDON (Reuter) — Britain's governing Labor party has moved into a four-per-cent lead over the opposition Conservative party and is favored by 47.5 per cent of the electorate, a public opinion poll published today in The Daily Telegraph shows.

The poll said 43.5 per cent of those questioned last week preferred the Conservatives and six per cent chose the small Liberal party.

A similar poll last month gave the Conservatives a two-per-cent lead over Labor — by 45 to 43 per cent — and the Liberals 8.5 per cent.

The poll said the drop in Liberal support might possibly be in the aftermath of murder conspiracy charges laid earlier this month against former party leader Jeremy Thorpe and three other men.

There is wide expectation that Prime Minister James Callaghan — whose personal popularity also has gone up, the poll said — will call a general election in October.

$25M SUIT LOST BY XEROX

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A U.S. district court jury awarded $25.6 million in new damages to SCM Corp. Wednesday for losses suffered because of Xerox Corp.'s monopoly practices.

The jury already has awarded SCM $11.7 million on other claims.

The suit was filed in 1973. The case is the longest jury trial on record in the U.S.

The findings are expected to be appealed.

"We are confident this will never be entered as a valid judgement," a spokesman at Xerox's Stamford headquarters said.

The $25.6 million represents what SCM's plain paper copier business would have been worth at the end of 1976 had it not been for the company's exclusion from the market by Xerox.

Guzman Takes Office

Washington Post

SANTO DOMINGO — Antonio Guzman, a 67-year-old cattle farmer, exporter and long time member of the political opposition, was inaugurated Wednesday as president of the Dominican Republic in this country's first peaceful transfer of power in 100 years.

While thousands cheered outside the Congressional Palace, Guzman promised in his inaugural speech to bring "a true institutionality" to Dominican democracy in a "climate of national agreement."

To discourage the possibility that serious disagreement over his presidency may still manifest itself, Guzman was bolstered by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, whose presence here heading a large U.S. delegation was clearly intended by both the Dominican Republic and its huge northern neighbor as a message to any sore losers.

In the midst of a private lunch with Vance after the inaugural ceremony, Guzman broke off briefly to announce and quickly swear in a new defence secretary and new heads of the country's navy and air force.

The appointments, with the exception of Army Commander Gen. Enrique Perez Y Perez, who apparently will remain in his post, eliminated in one stroke the high-level military command blamed for an abortive attempt during presidential elections last May to prevent an anticipated Guzman victory, by forceably stopping vote counting.

Rhodesian Wildlife Off-Limits

LUSAKA, Zambia (Reuter) — Joshua Nkomo's Rhodesian nationalist guerrillas gave themselves a new role today in the country's six-year-old bush war—big game warden.

"As a way of preventing the extinction of our wildlife by the departing colonizer, our forces have been ordered to bar anybody—be it a hunter, game viewer or ordinary tourist—from entering any game reserve in Zimbabwe (Rhodesia)," a statement from Nkomo's Zimbabwe African Peoples Union said.

It quoted an official Rhodesian announcement as saying 400 more elephants are to be killed to obtain foreign currency for the government from ivory sales.

FAMILY CIRCLE

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

After South had gone down a trick in today's deal, his partner—a lover of poetry—sardonicaly articulated the words of the poet: "God's in His Heaven; all's right with the world."

In his caustic way, North was trying to tell his partner that the latter had played the hand as though there wasn't a worry in the world; and that if South had taken a few moments to reflect about the possible evil that might be lurking, he would have fulfilled his contract.

Both sides vulnerable.
North deals.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♡	4 ♠	Dble.
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♡.

East's heart king was put up on the opening lead, South's ace winning the trick. South now mechanically played the queen of hearts, after which he intended to lead a third heart and trump it in dummy. But West ruffed the heart queen at trick two. He then returned a trump, declarer taking the trick in his own hand. A third heart lead was then ruffed with dummy's jack of trumps, but South still had a losing heart in his hand. With the loss of two diamond tricks being unavoidable, declarer incurred a one-trick set.

Had declarer paused to count his tricks before playing to trick two, he would have fulfilled his contract. In his own hand he had seven trump winners, in addition to two hearts. If he could ruff out but one of his two low hearts, he would have his tenth trick.

Since there was a distinct possibility that West's deuce of hearts opening lead was a singleton, declarer should not have attempted to cash the heart queen at trick two. Instead he should have led a low heart and conceded the trick to the defenders.

Assuming that a trump would be returned by the defenders, South would win the trick in his own hand, preserving dummy's jack. He would then ruff his remaining low heart with dummy's jack. The South hand would next be re-entered by ruffing a club, after which declarer would gather in the outstanding trumps. Then tricks would now be there for the taking.

Davis Secretary Testifies

cheques for the value of those two legs — even though he had not flown either first class or economy, but had used other means of travel on those legs.

One of these legs, Sheppard indicated in later testimony, was from Medicine Hat to Calgary, on which she said she believed Davis travelled not by commercial airline but "with the premier (of Alberta) on a government plane."

Hall asked Sheppard in connection with all of the refunds in question whether she had been made aware by Davis that he had downgraded and received refunds, and she repeatedly said: "No, I was not aware."

On occasion, she said, there were no ticket stubs (carbon copies) to submit with expense statements, and she said she reminded Davis of the importance of presenting such documents to back up expense claims. She told the court of a memo from Comptroller-General J. W. Minty on Dec. 22, 1975, to cabinet ministers when they took office, about expense accounting procedures, a memo she had shown Davis and which he had read.

She also said that when Davis took office they discussed forms of air travel, and he inquired about what class of travel previous ministers had used. She said first class, and he then said that would be "fine" for him.

McEachern, in cross-examination, got her to agree that the time of the Minty memo was "a very busy time." She also agreed with his statement that providing airline ticket stubs with expense statements "was no great issue" within the government accounting system. She said there was "a little bit, but perhaps the rules were relaxed for cabinet ministers."

Sheppard gave some inside details about events the day Davis resigned in her explanation of how she had not known of his economy class preference or refunds until his resignation April 3.

Davis met Premier Bill Bennett that morning and Hall asked what happened after that.

"He returned from the premier's office and asked me to type out his resignation. I asked him why. He said it had something to do with impropriety concerning airlines."

Hall: "What did you do then?"

Sheppard: "I guess I asked him what improprieties. He didn't answer right away, but indicated something to do with downgrading."

Later that week, on April 5, she said Davis asked her to type another letter. He came to her office with MLA's letterhead (he is still MLA for North Vancouver-Seymour) and asked her to type a letter to the comptroller-general. This letter was sent with a $2,300 cheque "without admitting liability" to cover any expenses that might be in dispute.

"I asked him why he would do that," Sheppard said, "and he said he was advised to do so by his lawyer."

Under questioning by McEachern, Sheppard agreed when McEachern read details of various expense accounts that had been submitted by Davis, that the ex-minister had appeared to be meticulous and almost Spartan in keeping down his expenses, sometimes saving on hotel expenses by staying with relatives or friends.

On one occasion, McEachern pointed out, government accountants had disallowed Davis a $5 charge on his expenses for a book about public finance that he had purchased on a trip.

Sheppard's assistant, Roach, appeared only briefly, saying that she had arranged airline travel for Davis occasionally when Sheppard was absent, and did so in the way she had been taught by Sheppard — first class tickets.

Suicide Linked To Film

MAIDSTONE, England (Reuter) — A 15-year-old boy accidentally hanged himself while trying to show his younger brother how a scene was staged in a late night television film, police said Wednesday.

They said Glenn Miller strangled himself n front of his brother Brent, 12, shortly after the start of a film called The Hanged Man — about a cowboy who survives a hanging for a crime he did not commit.

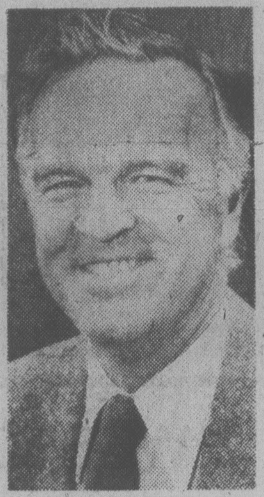
Out of the Past, A Day to Recall



By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

First of three parts

The displays will never be 'finished' says director Yorke Edwards

ECLIPSED by the Captain Cook ballyhoo and not observed by even a modest ceremony, today is the 10th anniversary of an important date in — and for — British Columbia's history.

The event brought the province's rich, colorful past and its treasure trove of natural history out of storage in dingy basements and dusty attics and placed them in an expensive, attractive showcase which has been seen by an estimated 10 million visitors during the past decade.

On this day in 1968, Premier W.A.C. Bennett officially opened the new Provincial Museum building on Belleville, an $8 million ultra-modern structure of 132,000 square feet which still is the largest museum west of Toronto and north of San Francisco.

It was more, much more, than just another opening of another provincial building. For British Columbians the occasion signified a sort of cultural coming-of-age, belated recognition that a superb museum collection built up over 80 years of uncertain, shabby existence deserved something better.

The new building's predecessor was itself a museum piece — hopelessly tiny, inadequate quarters in the east wing of the Legislative Buildings, where only a fraction of North America's best Indian collection could be displayed.

Priceless masks and other artifacts were hidden from public view in sundry attics and unused rooms. Totem poles were stored in a tin shed behind the buildings. For years a big Indian racing canoe hung from the ceiling of the motor-vehicle branch offices.

The museum was as starved for money as it was for space. As recently as 1962 its total budget was only $72,000. One item in that year's budget told the whole sorry tale: "Collecting historical data and purchase of specimens — $500."

But all that changed with the move to the new premises across the street. Today the Provincial Museum is a vital educational experience for students from all parts of B.C., a basic item on any visitor's itinerary, an asset of which British Columbians are obviously proud and an institution with an international reputation for excellence.

This year an estimated 1.3 million visitors will pour through its doors to see everything from a reconstruction of an Interior Salish pit house to a replica of the stern of Cook's ship Discovery.

The human story of B.C. is already there for all to see and now the Museum is turning its attention to the natural sciences. Taking shape on the second floor are dioramas depicting B.C.'s coastal forest, sea and seashore, the first phase of a project which could take another eight years to complete.

■ ■ ■

But museum director Yorke Edwards says the displays will never be "finished." Some already in place are not as effective as they should be and will have to be replaced, and ideally the others should be renewed at least every 10 to 20 years.

"The whole purpose of this museum is not for this century but for the next century," he explains.

Edwards' philosophy places the primary role of museums not in displaying but in preserving items for the future. Thus the display galleries which the public sees represent only the tip of the iceberg: behind the scenes there are research, publications, lectures and other key activities.

"In all there are probably at least 12 ways of reaching the public of which display is only one — a high-profile, expensive and obviously effective method," he says.

Although the major part of the museum's collections still remains in storage, this fact apparently doesn't disturb its director. Already the museum's galleries contain so much that most visitors cannot assimilate it all in one day, he says.

In any case, the material away from the public view is not merely lying idle and gathering dust. It is constantly being photographed by students, loaned to other museums and put to other uses.

Edwards concedes that some areas of the building had become "terribly overcrowded" years ago, but says space shortage is a chronic problem encountered by all museums.

Hardly a month goes by without the Provincial Museum receiving a delegation of visiting curators and experts from other museums, who want to study the display techniques and presentations used, in many cases because they have acquired new facilities themselves or hope to update existing displays.

They come from other Canadian provinces, from Hawaii, California, European countries and many other areas. And they usually go away impressed.

Discussing this reputation built up in the last decade, Edwards says: "It's undoubtedly due in large part to the super people we have working here — we have some of the world's best.

"Also, we have some pretty good collections. We have good things to show, good stories to tell from B.C.'s history. And the province itself is outstanding, so we're off to a running start."

The museum's budget this year is about $3.6 million, more than $2 million of which will go in salaries for staff totalling about 110 (the number varies considerably because several employees are on short-term contracts).

The amount available annually for acquisitions also fluctuates widely. It has been as high as $250,000 and as low as $30,000. But Edwards gives no sign of chafing under financial constraints.

"We realize we are wonderfully funded considering the size of the province and the economies of the time," he says.

What of the future?

Edwards doesn't foresee any expansion of the present building but he would like to establish a couple of "storefront" mini-museums on the Lower Mainland.

A present member of the museum staff and a former employee both told the Times that the outward signs of efficiency and inter-departmental harmony tend to be deceptive.

They claim the working atmosphere is clouded by petty jealousies and parochial thinking, with little attempt to co-ordinate the efforts of the various divisions.

One source drew the analogy of a mountain climbing trek. If each divisional head were to meet one day at the top of a mountain the effect would be one of total surprise, he said. No one would be aware that any of his colleagues was going to be there, let alone what route they had taken or the objective of the exercise.

■ ■ ■

Edwards acknowledges that communication and co-operation within the museum are not what they might be, but says he doesn't consider it a major problem.

"Personalities being what they are you are bound to get this kind of thing," he said.

"But when you hire, say, a marine biologist the smart thing to do is to get the best science person possible. Whether he also happens to be a good communicator is rather secondary, in my opinion."

When there are a number of experts gathered under one roof, each a specialist in a particular field, it's difficult to achieve a good level of spontaneous co-operation. And traditionally in museums this lack of co-operation between the various disciplines is most evident when it involves display, according to Edwards.

"But having made a study of this long before I came here I have yet to come across a museum that does it as well, as easily and with less friction than we do."

(Friday: The conservators' greatest fear.)

$45,000 Loss In House Fire

The fact that an off-duty Saanich fireman was in the house next door didn't save a Saanich home from being almost totally destroyed by fire early this morning.

Saanich deputy fire chief Orval McGregor said the fire — reportedly following a large explosion and a series of smaller explosions — caused an estimated $45,000 damage to the home of Robert Edward, 462 Goward.

The house was unoccupied at the time. McGregor said it has been classed as a write-off, although some portions are still standing.

An official from the fire marshal's office in Vancouver was travelling to Victoria this morning to investigate the cause of the fire, which was reported by a neighbor at 1.37 a.m. today.

McGregor said it is possible the fire had started some considerable time before the alarm was raised, and that the build-up of heat caused the windows to shatter, thus creating the explosive sounds.

But he emphasized that was speculation on his part, and explanations would have to await the fire marshal's report.

"Ironically the next-door neighbor is a Saanich fireman (Ron Stewart, 456 Goward)," said McGregor.

Postal Roadeo Saturday

The event — held to show the skills of postal vehicle drivers — is open to the public.

Drivers are tested on five basic manoeuvres, beginning with a serpentine test in which the drivers weave through a series of barrels, going forward and then reversing through the barrels.

Twenty mail service couriers and mailmobile drivers will take part. Each will do a five-minute safety check before taking the truck on to the course. Points are awarded for thoroughness of the check and penalties given if the movements on the course are not completed within five minutes.

The five top drivers will receive awards.

GLAZIER DROPS HIS OPPOSITION

City Softens on Royal Job

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Victoria city council appears on the verge of reversing its decision to withhold an additional $190,000 in funding for the aging Royal Theatre.

At a finance committee meeting today Ald. Murray Glazier, who last week moved that the money be withheld, reversed his position. Last Thursday council voted 4-3 against the expenditure.

But with Glazier changing his stand and with Mayor Mike Young away, it seems a good bet the Royal will get its money. Young cast the deciding vote in the last meeting.

Glazier said he'd originally been opposed to spending the extra $190,000 because of indications from Young and Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier that the province was working on a proposal for a new regional civic centre.

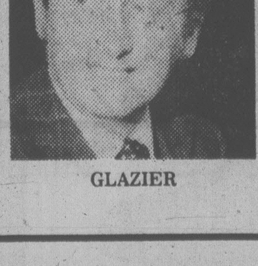
Glazier changed his mind after Royal Theatre committee members Ald. Ron McKenzie and Oak Bay Ald. John Goult said they felt both mayors were merely speculating.

"I frankly would be astonished if they had any hard knowledge and didn't come running to Ald. McKenzie as chairman of the committee and say 'Don't spend any more money. We're going to get a new theatre,' " said Goult.

Acting mayor Bill Tindall added he had heard nothing firm on the possibility of a provincially-funded civic centre.

The $190,000 being requested is to supplement $400,000 Victoria, Oak Bay and Saanich have already budgeted for the theatre.

Goult came to Victoria council to urge it to reconsider following decisions by Saanich and Oak Bay to approve the additional funds.



GLAZIER

He said without the extra money the whole Royal Theatre renovation project was in jeopardy.

Goult said the project was not aimed at completely refurbishing the old theatre, but simply bringing it up to scratch so it could serve the community for another five or 10 years.

He added that even if the province decided to commit itself to a new civic centre tomorrow it would be at least five years before the building could be completed.

Ask the Times

Q. What was the price of a gallon of regular gasoline in Victoria in April of 1976? How much does it cost per mile to run an average compact car? J.B.

A. Prices ranged from 69 to 74 cents a gallon in April 1976. The average compact car gets 30 miles to a 91-cent gallon of gasoline, so it costs just over 3 cents a mile in gasoline. However, considering depreciation, maintenance, tires, insurance, and oil as well as gasoline, you're looking at about 15 cents per mile.

Q. While in Toronto recently we had dinner in the restaurant at the top of the CN Tower in Metro Centre. Can you tell us how high the tower is? M.P.

A. 1,815 feet.

Region Districts Can't Self-Destruct - Curtis

There is no provision under existing legislation for the Mount Waddington Regional District to disband even if directors vote fir it, Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis said today.

Curtis said if all the directors of the northern Vancouver Island regional district resign, there are other methods to continue the operation of the regional government.

* * *

Regional directors of the Mount Waddington district voted 5-3 to end the regional government at a board meeting in Port McNeill Wednesday, and said they would ask Curtis to meet with them to discuss means of implementing their decision.

Curtis said, however, some form of administration will be kept in operation regardless of the directors' decision, at least, until an extensive report on the operation of all regional districts is in his hands.

The studv is being undertaken by the Regional Distric Review Committee which is expected to deliver its report in late September or early October.

Fred Mantic, instigator of the revolt and regional representative for the area around Holberg, was not at the meeting and the motion to withdraw was made by Port Hardy Mayor Brian Klaver.

Mantic said there is no reason why the district, which represents about 12,000 residents on the north Island and offshore islands, can't be looked after by local and provincial governments.

He says he is neither a rebel nor a politician, but just opposed to too much government.

* * *

The 48-year-old logging operations manager said the $800,000 budget is too high and 95 per cent of it is spent on unorganized areas within the region.

Curtis said he does not want to comment on the Mount Waddington situation in isolation from the other districts in view of the pending study.

But he did say he is aware of a growing concern about the operation of regional districts by people throughout the province.

Delights of Life in the Bog

Most cities and towns fill in their bogs and marshes, seemingly unaware of their esthetic values and importance as habitats for wildlife and plant life.

Not so at Pacific Rim National Park at Long Beach where a bog has been turned into a tourist attraction.

The park has developed a two-kilometre trail through the wet land starting near the former Wickaninnish Inn, which is now being developed as a public centre, and ending at Wreck Bay.

More than 2,500 planks were used to construct a board walk on the winding trail.

Depending on the season, native flowers seldom seen by city dwellers grow in the bog among stunted pines (Pinus contortus). The latter resemble pines featured in Japanese paintings and woodblock prints.

There are blue gentians, seldom seen by Vancouver Islanders, and hundreds of minute sundews, an insect-eating plant. Labrador tea, crowberry and the pink flowered kalmia abound.

The trail is a favorite walk for visitors from the Prairies, Eastern Canada and the United States.

"We don't promote the trail too much," said a park official. "If we did we would have too many people on it."

"Some people seem to fall in love with the trail," he added. "They walk back and forth several times before returning home. Perhaps it's the contrast with the sea that makes it so attractive for some people.

"The vegetation, so different from that of Eastern Canada, also seems to impress the visitors."

Vegetarian Diet 'Just Good Food'

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Anna Thomas chose many years ago to cut meat and poultry from her diet. But she does not preach the vegetarian lifestyle.

"I'm just interested in good food," Ms. Thomas said in an interview. "I'm just providing recipes for food that I like."

She is a film maker by profession. She said she wrote her first cookbook to help pay for her film studies at UCLA and because she could not find meatless recipes she liked in other books.

"The Vegetarian Epicure" was published in 1972. Surprisingly to her, the book sold and she was soon getting requests from vegetarians and non-vegetarians alike for more recipes. The results are in the recently published "The Vegetarian Epicure Book Two" (Knopf $12.95 hardcover, $6.95 paper).

It was a labor of love, she said. The recipes were culled from four years of travels, including a stint on location in Spain with her husband, film maker Greg Nava.

"The point is not that we're leaving something out by not using meat," Ms. Thomas said. "It's not a negative attitude. The attitude of the book is just that this is good food. I like to eat well, I like good tasty food."

"The books are not just for vegetarians," she said over a lunch of gazpacho and tortilla espanola — an egg, onion and potato omelet she said is very popular in Spain.

"It's the only cookbook that doesn't make you feel that you have to deny yourself to be a vegetarian. Eating should not be a punishment."

Her non-punishing recipes include an artichoke and cheese puff, wild mushroom and dill souffle, a Greek style potato salad, apples baked in a mixture of brandy, Curacao and water, and stuffed potato pancakes, Hungarian style. The pancake stuffing includes dried wild mushrooms, celery and walnuts and is served with a rich, creamy paprika sauce.

Nava calls himself a dedicated carnivore but said he still loves his wife's vegetarian dishes.

"The recipes are so good that you don't notice they're meatless," he said. "Most buyers of the book are not vegetarians."

Both of Ms. Thomas's cookbooks cover breads, soups, sauces, salads and dressings, egg dishes, casseroles, pastries, pastas and preserves.

"The main trick to good cooking is to start with really good ingredients," she said. "If you start with bad ingredients, it won't get any better.

"In the summer, you're a fool if you don't use fresh fruit, especially here in California where it is so plentiful and of such good quality."

She said she loves to give small dinner parties to practice new recipes.

People "climb the walls for invitations — and they're not even vegetarians," Nava said.

Ms. Thomas said high prices for beef and a resulting boycott helped create a market for her first book beyond health food stores. She also thinks its popularity was boosted by a growing awareness of food in relation to health and "a renaissance of creativity in the kitchen."

Too Many Carrots Turn You Yellow

QUESTION:
My baby really like sweet potato, so I fed it to him ofen. However, his skin developed a yellow cast which our doctor said was a result of eating too much sweet potato. How could this happen?

ANSWER:
This condition is called hypercarotenosis. It results from eating an excessive amount of vegetables like carrots, or sweet potato which are deep orange in color. These vegetables contain carotene, which our bodies change into Vitamin A. Excessive carotene is not converted rapidly enough to Vitamin A and it accumulates in the body giving the skin a yellowish color. The amount of carotene required to cause this outward symptom is highly individual.

To prevent this condition, you should feed your baby a variety of vegetables. With babies, it is often easier to feed them only the foods they enjoy instead of introducing them to new textures and flavors. They should be given a variety of different foods for this will ensure that they are receiving the many nutrients they need every day for health and growth.

QUESTION:
I don't want my children to eat popsicles because they contain so much sugar and food coloring. Can I make my own at home?

ANSWER:
Homemade popsicles are delicious, easy to make, nutritious, and can be low in sugar. A great variety of juices are available to make your popsicles. Apple, orange, pineapple, grape, and cranberry juice may be used as is or in different combinations of flavors. How about combining grape and apple, or orange and pineapple, or orange and cranberry?

You could also use the fruit juice from unsweetened canned fruit and combine it with another juice for a fruit cocktail popsicle.

Freeze the juice in moulds or in paper cups with wooden or plastic sticks for handles. To serve, run quickly under warm water until the popsicle is free of the mould. The children will love these nutritious snacks.

QUESTION:
My dentist talks about detergent foods. Could you give me some examples?

ANSWER:
Dentists refer to crisp, crunchy foods as detergent foods because they help to remove sticky foods from the teeth. Foods that fall into this category are crunchy low carbohydrate foods like raw vegetable pieces, such as celery, green pepper, carrot, turnip sticks, zucchini and cucumber slices or radishes.

Produced by the Nutrition Division of B.C. Ministry of Health.

WESTCOAST RATATOUILLE

- 1 green pepper, cut in julienne strips
- 1 medium zucchini, unpeeled; cut in ½-inch thick slices (cut on bias)
- ½ lb. mushrooms (leave whole if small; half if medium-size)
- 1 medium onion, sliced and separated into rings
- ¼ cup salad oil (approx.)
- 1 clove galic, crushed (use 2 for stronger garlic flavour)
- 2 tomatoes, cut in wedges (peel if desired)
- ½ tsp. salt (or to taste)
- freshly ground black pepper
- ⅛ tsp. thyme, crushed
- grated Parmesan cheese (optional)

Prepare green pepper, zucchini, mushrooms, and onions. In large skillet, heat 2 tbsp. salad oil; add crushed garlic. Saute green pepper strips and onion rings until tender — approx. 4 to 5 minutes. Using a slotted spoon, remove vegetables to large bowl; set aside. Add 4 tbsp. salad oil to drippings in skillet. Heat; add zucchini.

Cook, stirring frequently, until tender — approx. 7 minutes. Using slotted spoon, remove zucchini from skillet; place in bowl with green pepper and onions. Add mushrooms; saute just until lightly golden (about 4 minutes). Return sauteed vegetables to skillet. Add tomato wedges.

Season to taste with salt and pepper. Sprinkle with thyme. Stir gently to combine. Cover; simmer until piping hot and bubbly — approx. 5 minutes. If desired, sprinkle top of Rataouille with grated Parmesan cheese.

It's Slimy, Raw — and Popular

Hundreds of otherwise typical, impeccably dressed New York businessmen and women sit down these days to meals of raw tuna, sea urchin, cod roe and octopus served on bamboo leaves or with bits of seaweed wrapping for lunch and dinner.

Japanese restaurants in New York City have mushroomed from about 50 to nearly 200 in recent years. Owners have even found it necessary to form a Japanese Restaurant Association, to deal with chef-stealing, visa problems and the declining value of the dollar.

Aya Kuwayama, whose father had the first Japanese restaurant in Manhattan 25 years ago, said she used to visit each new one that opened, to say welcome and to sample the cuisine.

But that was when their restaurant, Miyako, was the only one of its kind on the block and one of about a half-dozen in the city. The restaurants opened too quickly, however, and she said she's given up trying to visit them all. There are six competing with her for the lunch and dinner trade on her block.

Kitcho, named after its famous parent in Japan where the elite dine at $200 a person, is one of the restaurants where grilled fish, bean curd, miso soup and other traditional dishes as well as sushi and tempura are on the menu. Complete lunches are in the $5 to $7 range, and dinners a few dollars more. Japanese businessmen in New York say the lunches are more expensive than they would be in Japan, where a quick noon meal costs $2 to $3, but the dinners are cheaper here.

The restaurants opened faster than they could be staffed, making the highly specialized sushi chefs hard to find and harder to keep.

Toshio Morimoto, head of Kitcho and chairman of the Japanese Restaurant Association, said he hopes owners will be able to set a pay scale. The association will also explore the possibility of buying and storing large quantities of foodstuffs because of soaring import costs.

"The problem is that there are at least 10 levels of Japanese restaurants here, and each uses a different quality of ingredient, right down to the chopstick," Morimoto said.

Owners have not been able to get working visas for the number of employees they would like to bring from Tokyo. Many of the waitresses and chefs are Filipino, Vietnamese, Chinese, Thai and Korean New Yorkers.

Forty thousand Japanese live in the New York City area, but Benihana, Chick-Teri, Dosenko Larmen, Sushi Ginza and others would not have prospered without lunchtime patronage of American businessmen.

The health food consciousness of Americans is one big reason for the surge in popularity of Japanese food, several restaurant owners said. Consisting mainly of fish and vegetables without butter or heavy sauces, many Americans see it as an ideal diet food.

Rocky Aoki, owner of the nationwide chain of Benihana restaurants, said his advertising campaign that began in the early 1960s helped educate Americans on the delights of Oriental flavors.

"Americans thought of Japanese food as being slimy," he said. "We had to convince them that it was not."

THE MOTHER EARTH NEWS

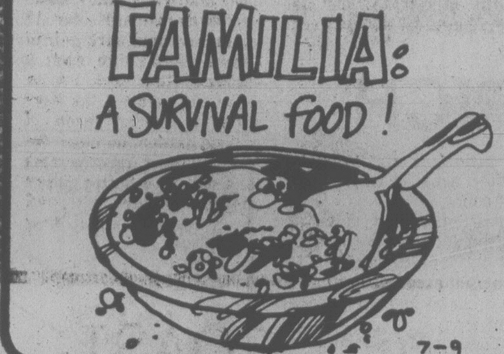
...it tells you how

Now that granola—the crunchy cereal based on whole grains—has become a national favorite, it's time to introduce you to familia. Familia was developed in Switzerland and, although it's not as crunchy, contains even more naturally nutritious ingredients than granola. Jud Eagle, a MOTHER reader from Oregon, likes it so much that he makes up 15 pounds at a time. Here's his recipe:

1 lb. oats	1 lb. sunflower seeds
2 lbs. wheat flakes	1/2 lb. pumpkin seeds
2 lbs. rye flakes	1 lb. sesame seeds
1/3 lb. soy flour	1 pkg. chia seeds
1 lb. wheat germ	2 lbs. raisins
1 oz. rice polish	1 lb. dried fruit
1 lb. soy lecithin	1 lb. nuts

Jud says you can buy the rice polish, soy lecithin and sunflower, pumpkin and chia seeds at a health food store. Any large market or food co-op should be able to supply the rest of the ingredients.

Mr. Eagle originally figured only on using his homemade familia as a nutritional supplement to his city diet, but he's since found that it's an ideal backpacking and camping food. "You may eat it cooked as a hot cereal, uncooked as a cold cereal, in breads and cookies or munch it as it is," he says. "Supplemented with fresh vegetables and fruits, familia contains everything your body needs to stay healthy. It's a perfect survival food."



Fluoride-Cancer Link Shot Down

Food for Thought

By DR. JEAN MAYER and DR. JOHANNA DWYER

To many people, "food additives" are fighting words. And of all the additives, fluoride seems to be the one that provokes the most controversy and fear.

The most recent instance of this is a report released a while back by two "researchers" who allegedly had "studied" the death rates in a number of communities which fluoridated their water and an equal number which did not. Their conclusion, which received considerable publicity, was that fluoridation is responsible for a substantial number of additional deaths from cancer.

Epidemiology, as you may know, is the science that takes a large population and statistically analyzes the prevalence and severity of a particular disease. The purpose is to sort out all the possible factors involved and try to discover which factors do, indeed, influence the development of the disease.

Recently, the National Cancer Institute decided to take a hard look at the statistics used by the two researchers who concluded that fluoridation increased the risk of cancer. In a close analysis, they found that the researchers had overlooked, or ignored, such obvious and fundamental risk factors as age (more older people die of cancer than young people); sex (more men are at risk than women), and ethnic origin (blacks have a higher cancer rate than whites).

And when all of these well-known factors were properly taken into account, the scientists from the National Cancer Institute concluded that fluoridation actually had no effect whatsoever on the cancer death rate.

The Cancer Institute's findings are supported by an impressive array of studies from a host of other leading scientific organizations. Back in the 1960s, the World Health Organization reviewed a massive amount of evidence from around the world and concluded that there was no reliable evidence that the use of fluoride, at the recommended levels of approximately one part per million, had any adverse effects.

Indeed, just the opposite is true. Fluoride is an essential nutrient that everyone needs. And in the recommended amounts in drinking water, it is the best single way we know for preventing cavities, especially in young children.

Since the WHO report, the British Royal College of Physicians, Oxford University, and two internationally recognized British statisticians, Drs. Richard Doll and Leo Kinlen, separately and independently have all arrived at the same conclusion: the evidence available provides no reason to suppose that fluoridation is associated with an increase in cancer mortality. The National Heart Lung and Blood Institute and the Center for Disease Control both agree with that conclusion.

Finally, in a report issued a few weeks ago, the Canadian Department of National Health revealed the results of a study of the incidence of cancer in 70 municipalities across Canada, in which they compared the death rate from cancer in fluoridated and non-fluoridated communities.

Their final report: No appreciable differences in death rates from all types of cancer or any specific tumor sites were indicated between fluoridated and non-fluoridated municipalities over the period from 1954 to 1973.

Nor were any significant differences apparent between death rates from all types of cancer when compared within the same group of municipalities prior to, and after fluoridation.

As the World Health Organization put it recently, the one change you can expect from lifelong use of fluoridated water is that you will suffer less from tooth decay.

DEAR ABBY: I've been dating Ethel for over a year. She's a beautiful 35-year-old divorcee with three children. The oldest is 10. I'm 44 and have never been married. The problem is Ethel's kids. One hour is about all I can take of them — then they start getting on my nerves. If it weren't for those kids, I'd grab Ethel in a minute because she's everything a man could want in a woman.

I suppose we could send her kids to camp in the summer, but how about the rest of the time? Boarding schools, maybe? But it will be years before the two youngest will be old enough to go.

Ethel is pushing for marriage, and I honestly hate to let her go.

CHUCK

DEAR CHUCK: It's a package deal. If you can't stand Ethel's kids, say goodbye to Ethel. And look for a woman who (a) has no children, (b) has grown children, or (c) is unbearable.

DEAR ABBY: You were very generous to suggest to DESPERATE that the reason her husband had lost interest in sex could be due to a physical or psychological disorder. Nine times out of 10 it's neither. I've been through this myself and so have many other wives.

When a husband reaches 40, he gets bored and restless, so in order to prove that he's still a "man," he reassures himself by making it with other women.

My husband was always "too tired" for me. There was nothing wrong with him physically or psychologically, but he was having an affair with his best friend's wife, so he pretended that he had lost interest in sex. The truth was, he had lost interest in ME! With others he was very much alive and able to function.

UNTOUCHED

DEAR UNTOUCHED: The number of "other letters" amounted to an epidemic!

DEAR ABBY: A lady who is a co-worker of mine wears the same dress for a week or two without changing. When she does change her dress, she wears that one for another week or two straight.

She is single and makes a decent salary, so there's no excuse for having such a limited wardrobe. There are several of us who would like to bring it to her attention. Is there some tactful way to do this without offending her?

SICK OF THE SAME DRESS

DEAR SICK: If she's clean, and her dress is clean and tidy, because you and others are "sick of the same dress" is hardly a legitimate reason for her to buy more clothes. Even though she's single and makes a "decent" salary, outsiders can know nothing of her financial obligations.

Freezer Full? Back to Jars

TORONTO (CP) — If you're a home gardener who abandoned canning for freezing and are loaded down with more beans and tomatoes than you can squeeze into your freezer, haul out your old canning equipment and hop to it.

Margaret Szeker, director of the consumer section of the Ontario Food Council, said that in home canning it is important to follow all steps carefully.

"The last step is just as important as the first," she said. "It involves cooling jars, testing for a seal and storing properly."

Mrs. Szeker said the method used for home canning fruits cannot be applied to vegetables.

If you can fruits, a water bath processor is the major piece of equipment you need, she said.

"However, if you are home canning vegetables, you must for safety's sake process them in a pressure canner. Because vegetables are low in acid, the bacterium Clostridium Botulininum can grow, so a special method to destroy this bacterium, should it be present, must be used."

When the bacteria grow in low-acid food a deadly toxin is produced. "Food infected with the toxin could appear normal," she said. "But if the toxin is consumed, botulism food poisoning will result."

The bacteria can be destroyed before they produce toxins by processing vegetables in a pressure canner at a temperature of 240 degrees F. at 10 pounds pressure for a given length of time.

In years past, tomatoes were considered high in acid and therefore canned in the same manner as fruits.

"However, in recent years it has been found that the acid level of tomato varieties varies," she said, "thus making the safety of any lower-acid home canned tomatoes questionable."

Using the raw-pack method for home canning tomatoes in preference to the hot-pack method avoids an overly solid pack, which can prevent adequate heat penetration during processing.

"Then citric acid is added to the tomatoes in order to increase the acid level for processing in a boiling water bath."

For each quarter jar of tomatoes, dissolve half a teaspoon of citric acid in one tablespoon boiling water. For pints, dissolve one-quarter teaspoon of acid in one tablespoon boiling water.

To assure distribution of citric acid throughout contents of the jar, half fill the jars with prepared tomatoes, add dissolved citric acid, then finish filling the jars with tomatoes.

Add hot tomato juice or hot water, leaving half an inch headspace. Place jars in boiling water in the processor and add boiling water to top the jars by one to two inches.

Recommended processing time for quart jars of tomatoes is 60 minutes; for pint jars 55 minutes. Start the counting time only when water in the processor begins to boil rapidly.

SUN DOGS are cooked on a solar cooker designed by Eve Jasinski-Whitehead, who is seen offering one to Keith Verman. The cooker, built under federal-provincial student employment grants by 10 students, costs about $3 to build and another $8 for a solar motor to turn it into a rotisserie.

'Hot Lips' Cure is Lengthy

By L. L. COLEMAN, M.D.

I'm 85 and I hope that someone can shed light on my problem. I have a burning sensation around my lips. My tongue is sore and my face surrounding my mouth itches intensely. I've had injections and pills, without any relief. I've gone from doctor to doctor in small towns and large cities, with no success. — Mrs. A.E.R.

Dear Mrs. R:

At any age, these symptoms must be very distressing. When such problems are brought to the attention of doctors, they study them from the point of view of allergy. They also try to find out if an elderly person's dentures can be a producing factor. Nutritional and vitamin deficiencies may also play a role in your condition. Have these been checked out?

Sometimes, such annoying conditions are long-lasting and demand great co-operation between patient and doctor. Going from doctor to doctor, without giving one the opportunity to test and treat you over a long period of time may be the reason for your failure to have the condition improved.

You must also know that there are many general conditions far removed from the mouth and tongue which may reflect themselves in some of the symptoms you describe.

About 10 days before I learned I was pregnant, I had X-rays taken of my teeth. Now I am in my third month of pregnancy and I worry that my newly conceived child will be affected. My doctor does not believe this is a possibility. — Mrs. G.F.

Dear Mrs. F.:

I completely agree with your doctor. The slight exposure to X-rays cannot possibly be harmful to you or your child. The dosage of modern X-ray is carefully controlled, and the screening makes it very safe.

This can be substantiated by talking to your dentist. You must accept everyone's assurance so that you do not bear an unnecessary burden of fear that will cheat you of the joys implicit in a healthy pregnancy.

Our old family doctor once told me I had "devil's pinches" of the skin. Is this term used anymore? — Mr. C.C.

DEAR MR. C.:

"Devil's pinches" is a charming name for the tendency to develop black-and-blue marks over the body. The devil was considered the culprit because the discolorations were usually insiginificant and the injuries that caused them were quickly forgotten.

Fair-skinned people seem to have this harmless disorder which sometimes affects members of the same family. Blood studies rarely show any abnormality in the clotting tendency. The "pinches" are due to the pressure on the skin or some slight injury that breaks a tiny blood vessel beneath it.

YOGURT ICE RICH

TORONTO (CP) — Frozen yogurt is slightly better for you than ice cream but it is just as high in sugar, Toronto area nutritionists say.

Mara Vaughan, with the city of Toronto health department, says the new fruit-flavored treat food contains 20 to 30 per cent carbohydrates, mostly sugar.

Many yogurt lovers are buying the new product expecting it to be much lower in calories than ice cream. But Mrs. Vaughan says plain yogurt has the lower calories, not fruit-flavored frozen yogurt.

The big difference is in the amount of butterfat. Ice cream has 10 per cent butterfat while frozen yogurt contains 2.3 per cent to 3.6 per cent.

Frozen yogurt sales are cutting into ice cream sales a bit but over-all sales for frozen milk products are up this year, dairy industry spokesmen say.

Bio-dex

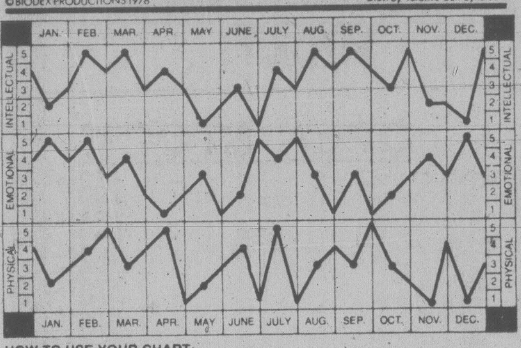
Aug. 18/78

By Ken J. Michaels

Your computerized biorhythm

©BIODEX PRODUCTIONS 1978

Dist. by Toronto Sun Syndicate



HOW TO USE YOUR CHART:

BIO-DEX READOUT:

11-15 Positive Cycle- Thinking of a new haircut? Your judgment as to what will suit you best is good today.

Many of you reading this column today will be feeling hot and tired. No way could I convince you that a 15 point high is a substitute for a long iced drink and a powerful air conditioner. Remember though that your high Bio-dex can help you cope with life's miseries. Try using your high intellectual level to figure out a route to the nearest lake or seashore.

MEANING DUBIOUS

WELLAND, Ont. (CP) — The owner of a funland-cafe here denies accusations from city council that the sign on his front window, reading Hook Her Here, is objectionable. Council says the sign could be read as Hooker Here, but the cafe owner says the sign only implies that young men should bring their girl friends in for a date.

Lightfoot Makes Legal History

TORONTO (CP) — In what is believed to be a precedent-setting decision, a judge has acquitted singer Gordon Lightfoot of a drunk driving charge because the testimony of an officer who gave him a breath analysis was inadequate evidence.

Deputy Crown Attorney Norman Matusiak said the verdict created a legal loophole that has "shot the whole roadside screening program."

Matusiak said similar cases awaiting trial might have to be adjourned until an appeal court makes a ruling on the Lightfoot decison.

Toronto police had testified that Lightfoot's breath-analysis reading was more than the legal limit an hour after his arrest Feb. 16.

But Provincial Judge S. M. Roebuck ruled that the Crown failed to prove Lightfoot's blood-alcohol level at the time he was driving.

Constable Timothy Hill testified he stopped the Canadian singer just after 2 a.m. because he was driving with high-beam headlights on.

He said that in his cruiser, Lightfoot failed a test on the portable and unofficial road-side breath-analysis machine, used to identify potential drinking drivers.

Constable Roman Guglielmi said the singer was given a second test about one hour later on a machine at the police station. The legal limit is 80 milligrams of alcohol per 100 millilitres of blood.

Lightfoot's lawyer, Gerald Kluwak, called no evidence.

Judge Roebuck asked prosecutor Matusiak how he intended to prove the official alcohol level in the singer at the time he was driving.

"The gap exists at this point," he said. "There must be evidence to relate the reading to the amount of alcohol he had at the time he was stopped. This is all conjecture."

However the judge said he interpreted the law as saying that he could accept a certificate of analysis written by the officer at the time of the test as evidence of guilt at the time of arrest.

Matusiak had copies of such a certificate with him during the trial. He said later he did not file them with the court because he thought the examining officer's sworn testimony was legally more effective under the "best evidence principle" of law.

Union Sues Bank

OTTAWA (CP) — The Union of Bank Employees has filed formal charges of "illegitimate anti-union activities" against the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Dennis McDermott, president of the 2.3 million member Canadian labor Congress (ICLC), said Wednesday.

In a statement, McDermott said the bank was holding "captive audience" meetings, interrogating employees, firing union members and circulating prejudicial literature.

His statement did not say when the charges had been filed but a spokesman for the CLC-chartered union said a hearing before the Canada Labor Relations Board would be held soon.

A spokesman for the bank's head office in Toronto refused to comment on the validity of the charges but said it is not the first time the bank has been accused of union-busting.

"We have been before the board before," he said. "But if you check, you will find that none of the charges have been upheld."

A board officer later said the bank has denied all of the union's allegations. The spokesman said that the case in question appears to involve the bank's branch of 199 Young Street in Toronto.

Dredge-Fix Firms 'Lost $650,000'

TORONTO (CP) — Three companies charged with defrauding the federal government of $800,000 by rigging the bid on a dredging contract at Ile d'Orleans, Que., in 1971 eventually lost about $650,000 on the contract, a Crown witness testified Wednesday.

Marine Industries Ltd., McNamara Corp. Ltd. and The J. P. Porter Co. Ltd., successful bidders on the $20-million project, are among nine dredging firms and 11 individuals charged with defrauding public agencies of more than $4.2 million by rigging bids on contracts between 1969 and 1975.

Roland Thibault, former president of Marine Industries, testified the Ile d'Orleans job was the most difficult dredging project he had examined in his career.

Thibault, involved in drafting cost estimates on behalf of his company, said the job site was plagued by bad tides, poor visibility and heavy traffic in the St. Lawrence channel. In addition, the job specifications called for excavated material to be dumped 16 to 19 kilometres from the job site, increasing transportation costs.

Maschino Probe

PARIS (Reuter) — The International Human Rights Federation said today one of its envoys will leave shortly for Algiers to investigate the case of a young Algerian woman who was allegedly kidnapped in Montreal and returned to Algeria by her family.

Lawyer Michel Zavarian will attempt to have what the federation termed a free meeting with Dalia Maschino, whose French husband has claimed she was drugged by his in-laws and taken back to Algeria.

10,000 Send Cheques Back

QUEBEC (CP) — The Quebec government has so far received about 10,000 federal tax rebate cheques from people who believe the money rightfully belongs to the province, assistant deputy revenue minister Paul-Emile Moreau said Wednesday.

The $85 rebates to Quebec taxpayers are Ottawa's way of paying out $186 million owing the province under a federal sales tax scheme which was rejected by Quebec.

Quebec preferred to make selective sales tax cuts to boost ailing industries in the province rather than reduce sale tax across the board as proposed by Ottawa.

Moreau said about 200 cheques are received daily and deposited in a special account until Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau decides what to do with them.

A study group is assessing ways to gather all the money for the provincial government and Parizeau has said he will announce his decision before the national assembly sits again in October.

EDMONTON (CP) — A sharp increase in salmonella food poisoning has prompted city health authorities to warn the public about the need for safe food handling.

The Alberta social services and community health department issued the warning this week after reported cases of Salmonellosis jumped to 395 between Jan. 1 and Aug. 5, compared with 341 cases for the same period last year.

MEG BACK IN U.K.

LONDON — Princess Margaret returned home Wednesday from a two-week vacation near Naples with Italian merchant banker Mario Durso. The suntanned princess, who divorced Lord Snowdon last May, walked from her flight at London's Heathrow Airport, smiling and chatting with officials. Margaret will be 48 next Monday. Durso, 40, is a bachelor.

The Farmer's Daughter Went Travelling

"It wasn't anything official," the spokesman said. "Delaney gave her the ticket without consulting the team officials. I understand Georgina became good friends with some male members while driving them around Edmonton."

By masquerading as a member of the Welsh team, Ms. Orleski avoided immigration problems entering Britain.

The team spokesman said he did not know if Ms. Orleski would be in trouble with authorities — "but they have to find her first."

Canadians visiting Britain normally are required to have a return ticket or a visa allowing them to stay there.

From Newport, Wales, Ms. Orleski said she is having a great time on her first trip outside Canada.

GARDENING

Evergreen . . . With Scent

Victoria is a place where gardeners can grow a wide selection of shrubs known as broadleaved evergreens, which contribute in no uncertain way to the attraction of our gardens in winter.

Probably the most easily recognized of these shrubs is the rhododendron which makes colorful showings from late March into summer.

But there are a number of quieter members of this group which make a fine background for the more prominent specimens.

Many of these evergreen shrubs have the additional attraction of flowers in winter or very early spring. If fragrance is added to some it will sound like a good fish story, but this one happens to be true.

Even now the first of the winter blooming evergreens is showing its buds. Viburnum tinus, the popular Laurustinus, has some of its coral buds formed and will open its first flowers by the end of September.

Viburnum tinus grows readily to a dense rounded specimen anywhere from seven to eight feet in height and the same in width.

Skimmia, in the varieties fortuni and reevesiana, is a smaller evergreen to three feet or so bearing small fragrant flowers in clusters at the end of its branches. The buds are coral and open to a pinkish-white in any wild spell during winter.

For a shady place that needs to be made attractive in winter this is a useful plant to know. With it might go a plant or two of Daphne laureola which, though lacking the typical perfume, does add the pleasant form of shining green leaves in a circular arrangement on stiff stems about 18 ins. high, and small but unusual greenish flowers beneath the whorl of leaves.

Osmanthus delavayi has small dark green leaves and clusters of small white fragrant flowers by late March. Growing to about six feet it combines well with later blooming Azaleas or with coniferous evergreens.

Osmaria burkwoodi is somewhat smaller in size with much the same characteristics and uses.

Broadleaved evergreen shrubs are not necessarily green in foliage. There are variegated forms with gold or white predominating.

A 30-year-old specimen is now eight feet high and twelve feet in diameter, and has supplied quantities of cut material for winter indoor arrangements. This is the only pruning that is necessary, and the shrub is immune to insects or diseases, growing well in average soil.

Its real beauty is appreciated when the golden leaves are wet with rain, reflecting the meagre light from a cloudy sky and casting a golden glow on the livingroom walls.

This is by no means a complete list of evergreen shrubs for the winter garden, but all are useful, interesting, and possess a quiet beauty which is enjoyed after the color of summer and fall.

Deceit, Ottawa Cries

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The threat of a national mail strike next month has left postmaster-general Gilles Lamontagne "deceived and disappointed," an aide to the minister said Wednesday.

The walkout threat came from Canadian Union of Postal Workers chief Jean-Claude Parrot earlier Wednesday as he led a union contingent away from talks under a government-appointed conciliator.

Parrot accused the post office of bargaining delays and attempts to whittle away rights already held by union members.

"We're going to have a strike to get them to negotiate seriously," he said.

Lamontagne's office later issued a written statement denying the post office was trying to roll back wages and accusing the union of making wage and hours-of-work demands "hardly conducive to a reasonable settlement at this time."

The pstmaster general said he has offered a 13.2-per-cent wage increase over 18 months but has rejected a 30-hour work week or shift premium payments of up to $18.30 per hour.

"The Canadian economy cannot support such unrealistic demands that are not in keeping with the more responsible positions expressed by other sectors of the labor movement," he said.

Lamontagne urged CUPW to return to negotiations instead of waiting for a conciliation report.

'Forces of Evil' Cited at Trial

VANCOUVER (CP) — A man accused of slaying his family said he "felt like a puppet on a string" and that "forces of evil" made him do it, psychiatrist Dr. R. L. Whitman testified Wednesday.

Earlier, the British Columbia Supreme Court jury heard that Ronald Dearden, 34, had admitted to a neighbor that he killed his wife, Marlene, 31, and sons Darren, 7, and Scott, 6, with a hammer, but did not harm his 2½-year-old daughter, Sandra.

Whitman told the court that in his opinion Dearden was legally insane at the time of the slayings on June 7, 1976.

The doctor testified that as a result of a disease of the mind Dearden was unable to rationally decide on the moral correctness of what he was doing.

Whitman, called as an expert witness by Crown counsel Wally Oppal, said that Dearden suffered a disorder of the process of thinking and an impairment of feeling and that he had differences with his wife over religion.

Dearden said he wanted to become deeply involved in religion, but his wife said she would go to church once a week, he said.

The doctor also testified that after telling him that evil forces caused him to kill his wife and sons, Dearden said: "I think I am mentally ill."

He said Dearden told him the hammer came into his mind as result of reading about a similar incident in Kamloops and that the idea kept coming up.

He quoted Dearden as saying that Christ had said the most important thing is the nourishment of the soul and that he wanted that more than anything else for his family.

Dearden said he thought he was going to find God and that it was important to become a Christian by Bibly study and baptism, Whitman said.

2,4-D Buffer Extended At Summerland Marina

Environment Minister Jim Nielsen said Wednesday a buffer zone separating a 10-acre plot treated with 2,4-D at the Summerland marina from areas open to the public has been extended to 2,500 metres.

Nielsen said the extension from the original safety zone of 800 metres was ordered after officials from his ministry detected traces of the herbicide beyond the boundaries of the application area.

Biologist Dr. Peter Newroth, of the water investigation branch, said there is no cause for concern because the amount of 2,4-D residue found is well below the minimum drinking-water standards set by the World Health Organization.

Newroth said the drift is constantly monitored by ministry officials and extending the safety zone is "within our contingency plan on all such applications. Such drift variance are expected in areas where there is strong ground currents."

He said arrangements have been made where alternate drinking-water supplies are necessary.

TOP COURT CUTS AWARD IN CRASH

VANCOUVER (CP) — A British Columbia Supreme Court judge Wednesday reduced by $234,850 a $454,000 award Brian William Lindal received in April, 1977, against his brother Kenneth Daniel Lindal for car crash injuries suffered in 1975 in suburban Delta.

Among the items deducted by Justice E. Davie Fulton, who made the original award, was one for $192,000 for cost of future care.

He made the reductions following an application in which it was shown there would be duplication because certain award items were to be paid by other sources.

Justice Fulton was told that the Insurance Corporation of B.C. has agreed to pay for the cost of maintaining Brian at a residence for the handicapped for the rest of his life.

Lindal sued his brother, Kenneth, after their car left a Delta road and struck a pole. Kenneth was the driver.

Korean Talks Proposed

SEOUL (AP) — The South Korean Red Cross proposed today that its leaders meet with their North Korean counterparts to discuss ways of resuming talks broken off in 1973 on reuniting millions of families separated by the Korean War. Lee Ho, president of the South Korean organization, said he is willing to meet North Korean Red Cross representatives at the truce village of Panmunjom.

Dapper Guest a Surprise

B.C. ornithologists and naturalists are all in a tizzy because the most dapper character in the bird world has made an appearance in B.C. waters — thousands of miles away from its natural habitat in the southern hemisphere.

Provincial ornithologist Wayne Campbell said today that over the last two weeks in July there were reports from several sources of penguins being seen around the coasts of northern Vancouver Island.

He said the reports of sightings came from naturalists at Mitlenatch Island nature sanctuary east of Campbell River, lighthouse keepers at Egg Island on the northeastern tip of Vancouver Island and a fisherman off Quatsino.

Campbell, associate curator of the vertebrate zoology division at the Provincial Museum, said there is little doubt that the two-foot-tall birds sighted were penguins.

Campbell said the problem now is to explain how the penguins got here. One explanation is that they escaped from a zoo, but checks with zoos along the west coast have turned up no reports of swimaway penguins.

He said no penguins are known to breed north of the equator, but he believes the ones spotted here could be the Humboldt species.

"The Humboldt breeds in terrific numbers off the coasts of Chile and Peru," Campbell added.

One theory attributes the local sightings to something which the ornithologists call post-breeding dispersal.

"What happens with a lot of birds is that as soon as the young have left, the birds wander all over the place," Campbell explained.

"It's possible that they got in a current and followed the feed north, using the coast as a corridor."

SECOND TRUCK in a week crashed on Vancouver's Port Mann Bridge Wednesday, spewing cheese down the embankment. One man, sleeping in the bunk-cab compartment, was found crushed to death after rescue workers spent 40 minutes disentangling the wreckage. The driver is in satisfactory condition in hospital. The truck hit a maintenance vehicle parked by the approach to the bridge.

$2.5B CUTS SET

Ottawa Juggling To Find Savings

OTTAWA (CP) — Robert Andras, minister in charge of the federal treasury, is juggling with billions of dollars in the government's pre-election project to cut costs, reallocate funds to promised new programs and make way for promised tax cuts.

In an announcement Wednesday night covering plans to March 31, 1980, he referred to total savings of $2.5 billion — $965 million arranged earlier this year, additional cuts of $1.5 billion just agreed by cabinet and further cost reductions of "at least another $1 billion" to be worked out in the weeks ahead.

But he calculated that when the project is complete and all the bills are in, total spending next year will grow at about the same rate as this year — roughly nine per cent.

Public servants face a job shuffle and loss of pay bonuses for bilingual work and some language training.

Andras said "there will be an absolute reduction" of 5,000 jobs in the 300,000-member public service, most of it after April 1, 1979.

However, the current attrition rate within the public service is said to be about 10 per cent annually, up to 30,000 jobs normally vacated and refilled.

While some jobs would disappear as a result of a proposed $2.5 billion reduction in government activity over two years, Andras said persons left unemployed would be given preference in other public service job openings.

"We're going to do everything possible to minimize the impact on those affected," Andras told a news conference.

The government plans to scrap on April 1, 1979, the bilingual pay bonus program that began last September and has been a thorn in the side of treasury board ever since. This will result in a saving of $35 million, Andras said.

Under the program, annual bonuses of $800 retroactive to Nov. 1, 1976, are paid to employees officially required to use both official languages — French and English — on the job.

'ANOTHER SHELL GAME?'

Times News Services

Cuts in federal spending announced Wednesday by Treaury Board Chairman Robert Andras were greeted with skepticism by opposition party leaders today.

New Democrat leader Ed Broadbent said federal plans to cut $2.5 billion from current and planned government spending make no economic or social sense.

The across the board cuts reflect no system of priorities, Broadbent said, and will result in reducing some worthwhile government projects.

"This is simply Liberal crisis management totally geared for political reasons, having no regard at all for the serious economic and social development of this country," Broadbent told reporters.

Conservative leader Joe Clark said federal spending cuts appear to him to be a "shell game" involving cuts in expenditures the federal government may not have planned anyway.

"The general idea I've seen suggests to me it's another shell game. They're making cuts in expenditures they may not have contemplated."

$30,000 Blaze: $1 Fine

MACKENZIE (CP) — Brian Seymour, 19, of Fort Ware, was fined one dollar Wednesday and sentenced to one day in jail after pleading guilty to a charge of arson laid after a $30,000 forest fire was started in early July.

Seymour was charged after the fire burned about 14 acres near Fort Ware, about 300 kilometres north of this Interior community.

He pleaded guilty July 19.

Acting Forests Minister Pat McGeer said the decision is a matter for the courts and not for a cabinet minister to comment on.

He said if the province feels the decision was not correct, then it is up to the attorney-general's ministry to appeal the penalty.

8 Held Hostage

CHICAGO (AP) — Two Croatian terrorists armed with guns and explosives seized eight hostages at the West German Consulate today, police said. One hostage was later released.

Officials said the terrorists — believed to be a man and a woman — want freedom for Stjepan Bilandzic, a Croatian nationalist leader imprisoned in West Germany and facing extradition to Yugoslavia.

One hostage, reached by telephone, was asked if the seven were in danger.

"Yes, we are, very much," was the response.

Three Balloonists Land In France

Times News Services

PARIS — Three U.S. balloonists set down in a whestfield near the town of Evreux, 40 miles southwest of Paris, this evening to end their historic journey as the first men to cross the Atlantic by balloon.

Thousands of excited Frenchmen raced to the landfall as the Albuquerque, N.M. businessmen — Ben Abruzzo, 48, Maxie Anderson, 44, and Larry Newman, 31 — guided their silver and black helium-filled balloon, the Double Eagle II, out of blue skies after a six-day flight from Presque Isle, Maine.

The landing came after the trio interrupted their descent in an apparent effort to manoeuvre their craft closer to the French capital.

Witnesses along French country roads said the three stopped their descent at about 1,500 feet and appeared to be trying to drift closer to Paris than Evreux.

As their huge silver-and-black craft drifted southeastward over Evreux, 50 miles west of Paris, the businessman-adventurers broke out the French tricolor to match the Stars and Stripes floating from their gondola.

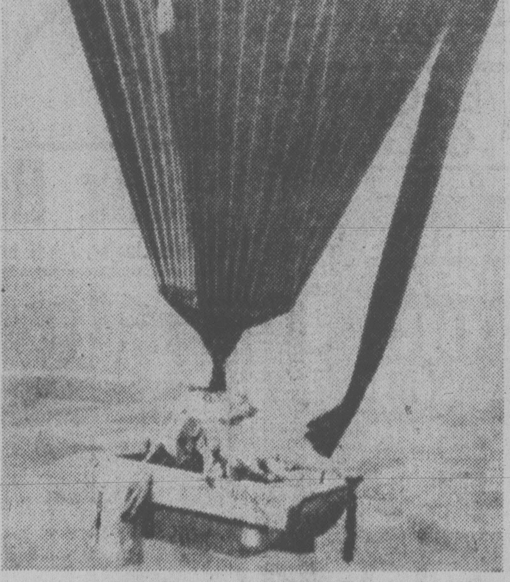
An hour earlier, they had radioed ground controllers they were starting to come down. In a previous message they had ordered hamburgers and French fries on arrival.

The flight electrified all of France. Crowds of thousands watched the high-flying balloon, a bright pinpoint in the sunny blue late-afternoon sky, as it crossed high over the Channel coast and across the hedgerows of Normandy toward Paris.



Victory wave as Double Eagle lands

Viewed from a helicopter, the 11-storey high balloon coasted gracefully through a cloudless sky over a checkerboard of farmlands, nudged along by a 24-kilometre-an-hour wind. The men were clearly visible in the red-and-yellow gondola, bundled in coats against the biting cold but apparently relaxed.

The balloonists' wives had flown from London to the Channel port of Deauville, where they were conversing by radio with their husbands.

It was the 18th attempt to cross the Atlantic by balloon, and the 16th from west to east. The last previous attempt, and the closest to being successful, was made two weeks ago by Britons Donald Cameron and Christopher Davey, who ditched 117 nautical miles from the French coast.

"This is certainly a great day in ballooning history and we congratulate them," Davey said today.

LRB Ends Hospital Dispute

VANCOUVER (CP) — A labor dispute that threatened to shut down 110 public hospitals across British Columbia was cooled off Wednesday when the provincial Labor Relations Board (LRB) ordered the hospital bargaining association to immediately implement a controversial contract award.

A LRB panel, headed by chairman Don Munroe, also ordered Hospital Employees Union (HEU) members, who walked off the job at four hospitals to protest the hospital labor relations association's (HLRA) decision to appeal the award, to refrain from further work stoppages.

The order came after 700 employees at Vancouver General Hospital and another 75 at the George Derby Branch of Shaughnessy Hospital in nearby Burnaby walked off the job Wednesday. On Monday, workers at Mount St. Joseph hospital here were off the job for 1½ hours and workers at Burnaby General Hospital held a study session Friday.

HEU president Bill Black said he believed his 20,000-member union will have no problem living with the LRB order. HLRA official Jack Fradley refused comment on it.

Police Raid Customs Men

VANCOUVER — A combined force of National Harbors Board police and Canada Customs investigators armed with search warrants raided homes of five customs officers Wednesday and seized a quantity of meat.

Police are investigating allegations of widespread corruption on the Vancouver waterfront involving customs officers receiving large quantities of imported meat for about one-half a cent a pound.

The allegations involve a senior customs official, several lower-ranking customs officers and employees of stevedoring, shipping and customs broking firms.

Sgt. Hunter Scot of the national Harbors Board police said Wednesday the investigation involved more than a ton of meat imported through the port of Vancouver.

"We searched five homes in Vancouver, North Vancouver and Burnaby," Scott said. He would not say how much meat was seized.

Police said they believe customs officers used coercion and forged documents to acquire meat for the cost of the duty alone — one-half a cent a pound.

When foreign exporters send meat and other commodities to Canada they often put in more cases than are specified on the manifest. This may be unintentional — due to bad checking — or it may be deliberate to allow for waterfront theft.

WALL ST. SOARS

NEW YORK (AP) — Enthusiasm over the Carter administration's pledge to try to stabilize the falling U.S. dollar sent the stock market soaring over the 900 mark Thursday in active trading.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 9.01 in the first one and one-half hours to 903.59.

The dollar closed at 185.4550 yen, up from 183.76 at Wednesday's close and the previous postwar low of 181.80 set on Tuesday. It started the day at 185.000

...91 Years Young

Those 10 years were a time of rebirth for an archaic, undernourished institution, a period which saw it spring forward as an energetic youngster in magical new clothes to become one of the foremost museums in North America.

It seems an appropriate time to compare the old and the new, to discuss what has been accomplished and what still lies ahead.

Subsequent articles Friday and Saturday will look at the work which goes on behind the scenes in two of the museum's divisions — modern history and conservation — as well as some of the special problems they face.

Davis Never Sought Economy: Secretary

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two former secretaries of ex-transport minister Jack Davis testified at the first day of his theft and fraud trial Wednesday that he never had expressed to them a preference for flying economy class on government business.

They also said he never had told them that he sometimes followed a practice of "downgrading" first-class airline tickets to economy before boarding flights, and personally obtaining refunds for the difference — while charging first class in expense claims he submitted to the government.

His use of the practice on eight trips is the basis of the charge on which he is being tried before County Court Judge J. J. Anderson. The trial is expected to last at least through Friday.

The testimony was given by Margaret Sheppard and her assistant, Jennifer Roach, both of whom have worked in the provincial transport minister's office for more than seven years. They ordered the tickets and reservations for seven of the eight Davis trips in question. He made arrangements himself for the eighth trip.

Sheppard, who prepared Davis' expense accounts, also testified that four days after Davis was forced to resign from the cabinet on April 3 this year over the downgrading, and after an investigation was under way into his airline refunds, Davis asked how she would answer questions about whether Davis had ever requested economy when getting her to make travel arrangements.

"Well, I said, you never did request economy,", she told the court.

The 62-year-old Davis, standing in the prisoner's box, pleaded not guilty to each count Wednesday as an indictment charging theft and fraud amounting to "approximately $1,074" was read to him at the beginning of the trial by the court registrar.

Davis had elected for trial by judge without jury at a preliminary hearing last month in West Vancouver.

The indictment says that Davis, between Feb. 28, 1976, and April 5, 1978, committed the $1,074 fraud and theft by misrepresenting the actual cost of his travel (mostly on trips east, to Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal) and by obtaining refunds pertaining to these airline tickets.

Crown prosecutor John Hall, in evidence of refunds and related documents, included applications made personally by Davis, who on one occasion received cash and on the others had refund cheques sent to his home.

Defence lawyer Allan McEachern is not contesting the facts of the refunds, but is contending that they do not constitute any fraud or theft because cabinet ministers can travel first class as a matter of right, or can claim as an allowance the difference between first class and a lower cost of travel.

Hall said in an opening summary of what he intends to prove that, on two legs of two separate trips taken by Davis, the accused former minister received refund

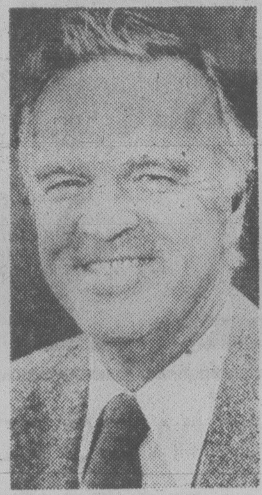
Out of the Past, A Day to Recall



By PAUL MOSS

The displays will never be 'finished' says director Yorke Edwards

First of three parts

ECLIPSED by the Captain Cook ballyhoo and not observed by even a modest ceremony, today is the 10th anniversary of an important date in — and for — British Columbia's history.

The event brought the province's rich, colorful past and its treasure trove of natural history out of storage in dingy basements and dusty attics and placed them in an expensive, attractive showcase which has been seen by an estimated 10 million visitors during the past decade.

On this day in 1968, Premier W.A.C. Bennett officially opened the new Provincial Museum building on Belleville, an $8 million ultra-modern structure of 132,000 square feet which still is the largest museum west of Toronto and north of San Francisco.

It was more, much more, than just another opening of another provincial building. For British Columbians the occasion signified a sort of cultural coming-of-age, belated recognition that a superb museum collection built up over 80 years of uncertain, shabby existence deserved something better.

The new building's predecessor was itself a museum piece — hopelessly tiny, inadequate quarters in the east wing of the Legislative Buildings, where only a fraction of North America's best Indian collection could be displayed.

Priceless masks and other artifacts were hidden from public view in sundry attics and unused rooms. Totem poles were stored in a tin shed behind the buildings. For years a big Indian racing canoe hung from the ceiling of the motor-vehicle branch offices.

The museum was as starved for money as it was for space. As recently as 1962 its total budget was only $72,000. One item in that year's budget told the whole sorry tale: "Collecting historical data and purchase of specimens — $500."

But all that changed with the move to the new premises across the street. Today the Provincial Museum is a vital educational experience for students from all parts of B.C., a basic item on any visitor's itinerary, an asset of which British Columbians are obviously proud and an institution with an international reputation for excellence.

This year an estimated 1.3 million visitors will pour through its doors to see everything from a reconstruction of an Interior Salish pit house to a replica of the stern of Cook's ship Discovery.

The human story of B.C. is already there for all to see and now the Museum is turning its attention to the natural sciences. Taking shape on the second floor are dioramas depicting B.C.'s coastal forest, sea and seashore, the first phase of a project which could take another eight years to complete.

But museum director Yorke Edwards says the displays will never be "finished." Some already in place are not as effective as they should be and will have to be replaced, and ideally the others should be renewed at least every 10 to 20 years.

"The whole purpose of this museum is not for this century but for the next century," he explains.

Edwards' philosophy places the primary role of museums not in displaying but in preserving items for the future. Thus the display galleries which the public sees represent only the tip of the iceberg: behind the scenes there are research, publications, lectures and other key activities.

"In all there are probably at least 12 ways of reaching the public of which display is only one — a high-profile, expensive and obviously effective method," he says.

Although the major part of the museum's collections still remains in storage, this fact apparently doesn't disturb its director. Already the museum's galleries contain so much that most visitors cannot assimilate it all in one day, he says.

In any case, the material away from the public view is not merely lying idle and gathering dust. It is constantly being photographed by students, loaned to other museums and put to other uses.

Edwards concedes that some areas of the building had become "terribly overcrowded" years ago, but says space shortage is a chronic problem encountered by all museums.

Hardly a month goes by without the Provincial Museum receiving a delegation of visiting curators and experts from other museums, who want to study the display techniques and presentations used, in many cases because they have acquired new facilities themselves or hope to update existing displays.

They come from other Canadian provinces, from Hawaii, California, European countries and many other areas. And they usually go away impressed.

Discussing this reputation built up in the last decade, Edwards says: "It's undoubtedly due in large part to the super people we have working here — we have some of the world's best.

"Also, we have some pretty good collections. We have good things to show, good stories to tell from B.C.'s history. And the province itself is outstanding, so we're off to a running start."

The museum's budget this year is about $3.6 million, more than $2 million of which will go in salaries for staff totalling about 110 (the number varies considerably because several employees are on short-term contracts).

The amount available annually for acquisitions also fluctuates widely. It has been as high as $250,000 and as low as $30,000. But Edwards gives no sign of chafing under financial constraints.

"We realize we are wonderfully funded considering the size of the province and the economies of the time," he says.

What of the future?

Edwards doesn't foresee any expansion of the present building but he would like to establish a couple of "storefront" mini-museums on the Lower Mainland.

A present member of the museum staff and a former employee both told the Times that the outward signs of efficiency and inter-departmental harmony tend to be deceptive.

They claim the working atmosphere is clouded by petty jealousies and parochial thinking, with little attempt to co-ordinate the efforts of the various divisions.

One source drew the analogy of a mountain climbing trek. If each divisional head were to meet one day at the top of a mountain the effect would be one of total surprise, he said. No one would be aware that any of his colleagues was going to be there, let alone what route they had taken or the objective of the exercise.

■ ■ ■

Edwards acknowledges that communication and co-operation within the museum are not what they might be, but says he doesn't consider it a major problem.

"Personalities being what they are you are bound to get this kind of thing," he said.

"But when you hire, say, a marine biologist the smart thing to do is to get the best science person possible. Whether he also happens to be a good communicator is rather secondary, in my opinion."

When there are a number of experts gathered under one roof, each a specialist in a particular field, it's difficult to achieve a good level of spontaneous co-operation. And traditionally in museums this lack of co-operation between the various disciplines is most evident when it involves display, according to Edwards.

"But having made a study of this long before I came here I have yet to come across a museum that does it as well, as easily and with less friction than we do."

$45,000 Loss In House Fire

The fact that an off-duty Saanich fireman was in the house next door didn't save a Saanich home from being almost totally destroyed by fire early this morning.

Saanich deputy fire chief Orval McGregor said the fire — reportedly following a large explosion and a series of smaller explosions — caused an estimated $45,000 damage to the home of Robert Edward, 462 Goward.

The house was unoccupied at the time. McGregor said it has been classed as a write-off, although some portions are still standing.

An official from the fire marshal's office in Vancouver was travelling to Victoria this morning to investigate the cause of the fire, which was reported by a neighbor at 1.37 a.m. today.

McGregor said it is possible the fire had started some considerable time before the alarm was raised, and that the build-up of heat caused the windows to shatter, thus creating the explosive sounds.

But he emphasized that was speculation on his part, and explanations would have to await the fire marshal's report.

"Ironically the next-door neighbor is a Saanich fireman (Ron Stewart, 456 Goward)," said McGregor.

Postal Roadeo Saturday

The event — held to show the skills of postal vehicle drivers — is open to the public.

Drivers are tested on five basic manoeuvres, beginning with a serpentine test in which the drivers weave through a series of barrels, going forward and then reversing through the barrels.

Twenty mail service couriers and mailmobile drivers will take part. Each will do a five-minute safety check before taking the truck on to the course. Points are awarded for thoroughness of the check and penalties given if the movements on the course are not completed within five minutes.

The five top drivers will receive awards.

GLAZIER DROPS HIS OPPOSITION

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Victoria city council appears on the verge of reversing its decision to withhold an additional $190,000 in funding for the aging Royal Theatre.

At a finance committee meeting today Ald. Murray Glazier, who last week moved that the money be withheld, reversed his position. Last Thursday council voted 4-3 against the expenditure.

But with Glazier changing his stand and with Mayor Mike Young away, it seems a good bet the Royal will get its money. Young cast the deciding vote in the last meeting.

Glazier said he'd originally been opposed to spending the extra $190,000 because of indications from Young and Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier that the province was working on a proposal for a new regional civic centre.

Glazier changed his mind after Royal Theatre committee members Ald. Ron McKenzie and Oak Bay Ald. John Goult said they felt both mayors were merely speculating.

"I frankly would be astonished if they had any hard knowledge and didn't come running to Ald. McKenzie as chairman of the committee and say 'Don't spend any more money. We're going to get a new theatre,'" said Goult.

Acting mayor Bill Tindall added he had heard nothing firm on the possibility of a provincially-funded civic centre.

The $190,000 being requested is to supplement $100,000 Victoria, Oak Bay and Saanich have already budgeted for the theatre.

Goult came to Victoria council to urge it to reconsider following decisions by Saanich and Oak Bay to approve the additional funds.

GLAZIER

He said without the extra money the whole Royal Theatre renovation project was in jeopardy.

Goult said the project was not aimed at completely refurbishing the old theatre, but simply bringing it up to scratch so it could serve the community for another five or 10 years.

He added that even if the province decided to commit itself to a new civic centre tomorrow it would be at least five years before the building could be completed.

Ask the Times

Q. What was the price of a gallon of regular gasoline in Victoria in April of 1976? How much does it cost per mile to run an average compact car? J.B.

A. Prices ranged from 69 to 74 cents a gallon in April 1976. The average compact car gets 30 miles to a 91-cent gallon of gasoline, so it costs just over 3 cents a mile in gasoline. However, considering depreciation, maintenance, tires, insurance, and oil as well as gasoline, you're looking at about 15 cents per mile.

Q. While in Toronto recently we had dinner in the restaurant at the top of the CN Tower in Metro Centre. Can you tell us how high the tower is? M.P.

A. 1,815 feet.

Region Districts Can't Self-Destruct - Curtis

There is no provision under existing legislation for the Mount Waddington Regional District to disband even if directors vote fir it, Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis said today.

Curtis said if all the directors of the northern Vancouver Island regional district resign, there are other methods to continue the operation of the regional government.

* * *

Regional directors of the Mount Waddington district voted 5-3 to end the regional government at a board meeting in Port McNeill Wednesday, and said they would ask Curtis to meet with them to discuss means of implementing their decision.

Curtis said, however, some form of administration will be kept in operation regardless of the directors' decision, at least until an extensive report on the operation of all regional districts is in his hands.

The study is being undertaken by the Regional District Review Committee and is expected to deliver its report in late September or early October.

Fred Mantic, instigator of the revolt and regional representative for the area around Holberg, was not at the meeting and the motion to withdraw was made by Port Hardy Mayor Brian Klaver.

Mantic said there is no reason why the district, which represents about 12,000 residents on the north Island and offshore islands, can't be looked after by local and provincial governments.

He says he is neither a rebel nor a politician, but just opposed to too much government.

* * *

The 48-year-old logging operations manager said the $800,000 budget is too high and 95 per cent of it is spent on unorganized areas within the region.

Curtis said he does not want to comment on the Mount Waddington situation in isolation from the other districts in view of the pending study.

But he did say he is aware of a growing concern about the operation of regional districts by people throughout the province.

Delights of Life in the Bog

Most cities and towns fill in their bogs and marshes, seemingly unaware of their esthetic values and importance as habitats for wildlife and plant life.

Not so at Pacific Rim National Park at Long Beach where a bog has been turned into a tourist attraction.

The park has developed a two-kilometre trail through the wet land starting near the former Wickaninnish Inn, which is now being developed as a public centre, and ending at Wreck Bay.

More than 2,500 planks were used to construct a board walk on the winding trail.

Depending on the season, native flowers seldom seen by city dwellers grow in the bog among stunted pines (Pinus contortus). The latter resemble pines featured in Japanese paintings and woodblock prints.

There are blue gentians, seldom seen by Vancouver Islanders, and hundreds of minute sundews, an insect-eating plant. Labrador tea, crowberry and the pink flowered kalmia abound.

The trail is a favorite walk for visitors from the Prairies, Eastern Canada and the United States.

"We don't promote the trail too much," said a park official. "If we did we would have too many people on it."

"Some people seem to fall in love with the trail," he added. "They walk back and forth several times before returning home. Perhaps it's the contrast with the sea that makes it so attractive for some people.

"The vegetation, so different from that of Eastern Canada, also seem to impress the visitors."
